Those daily newspapers "which are continually pointing out to the consumer that retail prices are too high," were criticised by D. W. Clark.

"Some papers seem to think that the grocer is in business for his health only and should not get any profit on his goods. The papers have no right to interfere in the grocer's business nor to attempt to show him at what prices to sell. They know nothing about the cost of doing business and are in no better position to say at what prices goods should sell than the grocer is to say what a paper should be sold at or the amount that ought to be charged for advertising."

One dealer thought the price of canned goods too high considering the crop of vegetables last year and pointed out that the grocer was not making nearly as much money out of canned goods as other years because the sales were smaller. Other claimed to be selling just as many as before.

Canned Lobster Dearer.

The fact was noted that new pack lobsters are higher and that it will be impossible to sell one-half pound tin at 25 cents at a fair profit. Cases in which profits were being clipped were mentioned, one being an advance of two cents per pound a company had made on its tea, which it was claimed meant just so much less profit for the grocer as the retail price could not be increased.

"The papers are maintaining that grocers are getting too much profit on butter and eggs," remarked one dealer, "while at the present time profits are much smaller than some years ago and the amount of money invested has been greatly increased."

A communication was received from S. L. Sheppard, St. John's, Newfoundland, asking for information in respect to organizing a retail grocers' association in that city. This information will be forwarded with a copy of the by-laws, regulations, etc.

Dealer Secured Fair Profit on Every Day Seller

By J. W. Bryans.

Besides careful buying, endeavoring to sell more goods and looking after all leaks both large and small, the retail grocer has at hand other methods which may be used to increase his profits. The merchant is in business to make as much money as possible and should constantly be on the lookout for any ways in which he may make more money.

One method that will assist in increasing the profit column is by selling those goods which pay the biggest margin of profit. In all cases, however, when substituting an article one must be sure that its quality is as good, or better, especially when he is substituting an article that pays a better profit. This rule should never be forgotten, for even if the increase in profit is large, it in no way compares with the harm done by substituting an inferior article.

You should be fully convinced, yourself, that the article you are offering is just as good, or, you should have behind it a guarantee that will protect the customer. There are many cases when an article paying a large profit is just as good if not better than one with a smaller profit. This latter condition is usually brought about because certain manufacturers allow the retailer only a small margin and use part of the amount they have clipped off the merchant's profit to advertise the article to the consumer, believing that this will force the dealer to sell what is asked for.

A grocer recently told me that he has the confidence of his customers and possesses sufficient salesmanship to sell the article he wishes no matter how well advertised a similar article may be. He was not a "slot machine," he said.

A manufacturer of a well-known foodstuff, who advertises extensively to the consumer, recently advanced the price of his product, so that the margin of profit to the retailer was cut down considerably. "I had a big sale of this particular foodstuff," he said, "but I required something more in my business than a big sale; that something is a fair profit. I secured the names of three manufacturers of a similar line and wrote them saying they might call and show me their goods. After a careful examination I selected one which I believed to be of as high quality as the one I had been selling. I decided to push this believing that doing so would be to my own advantage and would also give the customer equal satisfaction.

"When I came across a customer who was any way doubtful I would say: 'You take this home, and if you don't find it as good as the one you have been using, bring it back and your money will be cheerfully refunded.'

"I never had one purchase returned nor did I have a complaint—and I made 15 cents more on every dozen. I have found several instances of this and have been able in all cases to sell the brand of goods that I wished."

"There is, however, a much greater advantage, which we derive from this co-operation. For instance, last week, the grocer from across the street came over and asked if Mrs. Blank was running an account with me. She had, as a matter of fact, just started to do so. I found that she had run a grocery bill across the street amounting to $25.00 and had then come to me. She had run a bill of about $10, so I informed her that she would have to pay up. No doubt if I had not learned from the other grocer, she would have run as large a bill as she could and then left to deal with yet some other store.

"By these methods, the grocers in this vicinity are able to keep bad credits down very low and bad customers culled out," he said.

A merchant in a country town recently said: "In a small town like this we find friendliness between the dealers a good thing. It takes a couple of days to get supplies of groceries in, and it is very handy to be able to borrow some article which you have run short of from another dealer. We also combine in buying sugar, salt and other goods which can be bought cheaper in quantity. By this method, we do not have to keep our money invested in goods so long. If I bought a car load of salt myself, it would take me a year to sell it but by four of us buying together, I only get one-quarter of a car and, therefore, not so much money invested. It works the same way with sugar and other articles.

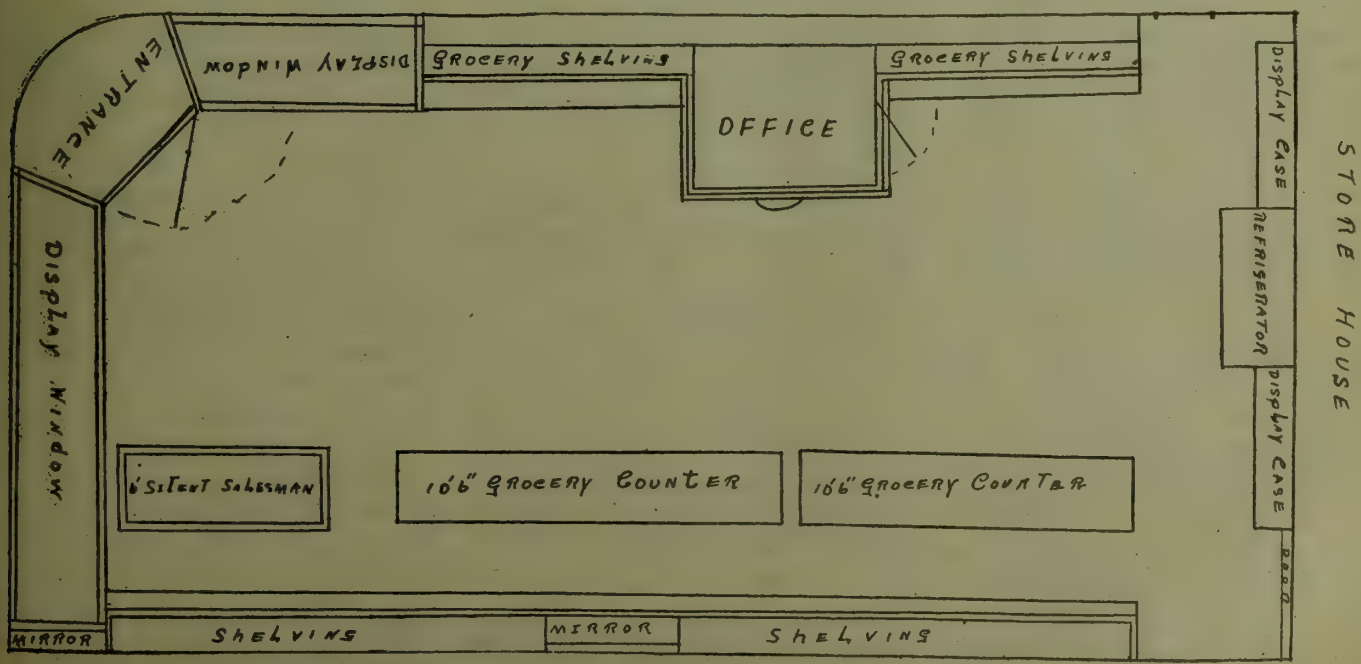
"We also," he said, "often combine in shipments to save freight. Last week another merchant down the street was getting a small shipment by express and as I was also getting some from the same place, we bulked the shipments and got both for about the same expense as the one would have cost."

When Co-operation Becomes Blessing To all Concerned

Because of an unfriendliness that blossomed out into a full-fledged enmity the spectacle is often to be seen in small towns of two or more grocers indulging in a price-cutting war, that the one might outstrip the other. As a result the profits of all concerned are cut down considerably and generally no extra business is gained.

"Now," said a merchant in Toronto lately, "if the retailers would work harmoniously together instead of deliberately attempting to injure each other, it would be greatly to their advantage. We find it so in this district. If I happen to run short of any article, my brother grocer across the street is always willing to lend me some. If he runs short he comes to me.

Dealer Takes Advantage of Both Streets



Method Adopted by Hamilton Grocer to Obtain Best Results From Corner Position—Window Display on Two Sides—Silent Salesman Prominently Placed—Mirrors Put in to Reflect Window Goods—Display Case Against Walls.

Hamilton, Ont., Feb. 23.—The plan of the grocery store of H. Cummings of this city is here shown. The store borders on two streets and advantage has been taken of this fact to have the entrance on the corner, leaving a show window on either side, so that a window display is open to view on both streets.

A six-foot silent salesman is situated at the front of the store, so that it will catch the eye of customers as they enter. Grocery counters are placed down one side of the store only, display shelves being erected on the other. On this side of the store is the office, in a central position, so that it will be convenient.

The main show window is improved by the addition of a mirror which helps in display. Another mirror is also placed into the shelving on one side of the store where it is ornamental and also useful to the women customers.

At the back part of the store, the refrigerator is placed in a position that makes it handy for the clerks. On each side, against the wall, is a display case, while a door opens into the store house just opposite the grocery counter, thus making it easier to secure goods from the reserve stock.

Synopsis of Martin's Co-operative Bill

Survey of Legislation Introduced Into the Commons by Member for Regina—Similar in General Plan to Monk Bill — Gives Any Seven Persons Power to Borrow Money, Sell Shares and to Buy, Sell or Manufacture Anything.

The following is a synopsis of a Co-Operative Societies Bill which has been introduced into the House of Commons at Ottawa, by W. M. Martin, M.P., of Regina.

This condensation explaining just what bearing this piece of legislation will have on the manufacturing, wholesale and retail business has been sent out to the members of Parliament by the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada, through its Dominion secretary, E. M. Trowern of Toronto.

This Martin Bill seems to go even farther than did the legislation fathered by Mr. Monk, a synopsis of which was given in The Grocer some time ago.

"Two years ago, the preceding (Monk Bill), and the following bill were introduced as one measure. Last year they were separated into two bills, and the same plan is being followed this year; but while they are introduced separately, they bear a very close relationship one to the other.

"The former is for the purpose of securing the money from the people, and the latter is to enable them to secure and invest the money in co-operative societies to manufacture and to do a wholesale and retail business.

Same General Plan.

"The same general plan is followed in the one, as in the other. Seven persons can secure a charter from the Government at no cost to themselves, and they place the words "Co-operative and Limited" to w hatever name they may choose, and with seven ($7.00) dollars, they can commence business. They can secure credit if they choose, and they can borrow money from the Co-operative Loan and Savings Company, and with the borrowed money together with the sale of shares, they can buy, sell or manufacture anything from an ocean vessel to a tin pot. They can manufacture, or buy and sell at wholesale or retail, grain, land, timber, paper, coal, produce, cement, dry goods, hardware, jewelery, boots and shoes, or anything they choose, from a bale of hay to a needle.

"The preamble to this bill sets out that its purpose is "to promote economy and thrift," and the official figures in Lancashire, England, the birthplace of this system, and where they are operating on a large scale, shows that the percentage of indoor paupers is on the top of the list, out of fifty different counties.

No Restrictions.

"No restrictions are placed in their charter as to how they shall conduct their business, only by the rules they make themselves, or how their operations can be properly inspected or controlled by Government, until some one scents danger.

"They can issue any sort of prospectus they wish, without any supervision.

"They can advertise and announce in Canada as they advertise and announce in England and Scotland, that their chief mission is to 'eliminate the private trader,' which means that they are not 'private traders.' Their endeavor being to leave the impression that they are 'state-owned' or 'owned by the people,' or authorized by the Government.

"Evidence shows that over eight hundred of these societies failed in England and Scotland during twenty years, and caused serious and disastrous loss.

"To induce the public or their members to deal with them, they offer them dividends or more properly speaking, 'bribes,' on their purchases, every three, six or twelve months, ranging from five to twenty-five per cent. In other words, it is the old trading stamp scheme, only dressed up in other garments. There is no provision in this bill to prevent this.

"They claim that these bills which they have introduced in Canada, are modelled on the same plan as those operated in England or Scotland.

"So silently and unnoticed was this legislation secured in the British House of Commons, that the merchants and manufacturers did not realize what it meant until after it had become law.

"Since they have commenced operations, and got themselves entrenched, and pay no income tax, and pay nothing for their charters, the commercial organizations all over Great Britain have become thoroughly aroused, and they are lining up man to man, and shoulder to shoulder, to attack this monster. Their task will be a big one, and we hope them success, but we fear they have awakened too late.

"One co-operative wholesale society, in Manchester, did a business in one year of one hundred and ten million dollars ($110,000,000.00). They supply a host of retail co-operative stores. The manufacturers at first supplied them with goods and helped them to destroy, or 'eliminate' as they say the 'private trader.' Now they have factories, vessels, farms, mines, banks, etc., of their own, and they manufacturers also have joined the army of commercial men, who are demanding that the special privilege they secured while the business men of Great Britain 'were asleep at the switch' should be taken away from them and that all men in trade should have equal rights, and no one should have special privileges.

"If these bills pass the Dominion Parliament, they will be able to operate and ignore all restrictions that govern Provincial charters, and thus secure special privileges over legitimate incorporated companies.

"In Canada, 'The Retail Merchants' Association of Canada,' being numerically in the fore front, have been on the watch tower keeping an eye on unfair commercial and financial legislation, and we have so far kept this monster out of this fair Dominion. We have fought a good fight; and we have been spreading the educational work. Those members of the Dominion House and of the Senate who have listened to our story, and who understand the financial importance of our commerce, have stood loyally by us. They recognize the danger of these measures, and by their zeal and their wisdom, they have thrown these bills out three times. May we hope that they throw them out again, and thus carry out the wishes of the thousands of manufacturers, wholesalers, retailers and financial men of Canada. Can we rely upon you to assist us?"

EATON MAY BUILD GREATER TORONTO STORE

Statement That Mail Order House is Actual Purchaser of Expensive Toronto Block at Yonge and Carlton Streets — Structural Engineers Said to Have Inspected Old Store and Reported Adversely—Value of Ground Floor.

Toronto, Feb. 23.—Although the veil of mystery which hid from the first the identity of the power behind the purchasers of that valuable block of Toronto real estate, at Yonge and Carlton Streets has never been entirely lifted, the gauze has been pulled up far enough to enable some responsible persons to make the statement that the T. Eaton Company holds the key, and that the land was secured solely with a view to the erection there of a department store larger than the old. And those who make the statement give what appears to be a reasonable chain of argument to substantiate their claim.

Visit of Structural Engineers.

There came to Toronto last fall, it is said, on the invitation of John C. Eaton, president of the T. Eaton Company, two structural engineers, to pronounce upon the possibility of there being constructed out of the present chain of buildings that stand at the corner of Queen and Yonge Streets, one big, solid, uniform store. It is understood these engineers examined the present edifice, from basement to roof, and that their report was to the effect that while the newer sections of the store would bear up, the older, wings would not stand the strain of such construction. Furthermore the experts are reported to have said, that the loss to the company due to interruption of business, would be heavy enough to almost suffice to build a new store on another site.

It has also been remarked that all remodelling work which has been done by the company on their present building, since the visit of these experts to Toronto, has been along lines calculated to stand for but a short time, that is, wood has been put in where steel would have gone under ordinary conditions.

Ground Floor Business.

And then again there are those who say that Mr. Eaton has declared his intention of building a new store with a tremendous ground floor space. It is reported that he has estimated that by far the greatest part of the business of the company is done on the ground floor. Some say, even that it is his belief that 85 per cent of his entire business in Toronto is transacted on the ground floor.

So, it would seem that all these facts combined make it highly probable that the Eaton Company is in reality the purchaser of the block in question. The floor plan of a structure raised there would be large. When the land is to be built upon is not known. Cards have been displayed, however, in the windows of the stores along its Yonge Street front carrying the assurance that leases covering five years, would be given. So it would appear that the owners of this expensive property are in no hurry to commence construction.

OPPORTUNITIES IN SEEDS.

The Grocer would draw attention to an article appearing in this issue, dealing with the display and sale of seeds. It is written by a retail grocer who has had considerable experience in that line, and is worthy of the consideration of every dealer who handles this side line.

In country communities, villages and small towns—anywhere where the farmer or garden man is wont to congregate—there is a chance for the grocer and general merchant to transact considerable business in seeds. This sort of trade goes to the man who is first in the field. The nearness of spring makes now the time to stock up. No time should be lost about aranging for proper display, and energetic selling methods.

Opportunity is there for some bright young clerk to strike out along original lines in the handling of the spring supply of seeds.

KANSAS EGGS IN B. C.

From market reports sent in from British Columbia it is as plain as the freckles on your face that, whether Reciprocity goes through or not, eggs from the state of Kansas, U. S. A., are going to be a strong feature of the produce market of the Province on the Pacific coast for some time to come.

California, it appears, was the state to which citizens of the sunset province looked for relief when the prices of the local eggs soared skyward. But it seems now that the domestic hen in Kansas has been so energetic the past while that there were plenty to spare. Accordingly, some were billed through to Vancouver, and at a price, almost ten cents a dozen lower than that charged for the California product.

Possibly this invasion will not last, but it only goes to show that one can never tell exactly what's going to happen anywhere on this old world of ours. But it seems queer that the price of eggs in Vancouver and Victoria should have to tumble before the onslaught of a product of Kansas, U. S. A.

THE POWER OF PERSONALITY.

To every man belongs the power to affect in some degree, everyone with whom he comes to address himself. Every man may not realize nor appreciate this heritage — for heritage it is — but it is there all the same. It is, as the breath of the flesh and blood of him; as powerful and as kind as the kick of his foot and the clasp of his hand. And you, Mr. Grocer, because of your personal touch with so many women customers who do not reason always, can well afford to study this effect.

It would be easier to catch a humming bird with a fish-net than to find a man the effect of whose presence upon his fellow-beings is always pleasing. There may be such a phenomenon, but he has not declared himself around these parts. So it is for everyone, and especially a grocer whose business depends almost entirely upon the good will of his customers to gauge this effect, and, where he finds it repelling, to either correct it by simple power of will, or else have some one else wait upon that customer.

A typical instance, in which this "presence effect" played a prominent role came to the attention of The Canadian Grocer a little while ago.

The dealer in question was the proprietor of at least two stores, with probably half a dozen clerks under him. Personally, he was a likeable chap, who strove to make himself agreeable, and his goods were the best, probably, in a considerable neighborhood.

Now there was a certain woman—a good customer, too— who would go to the door of one of those stores and glance in. If that dealer were in the store she would simply not go in, but would go on down the street to a little establishment where the display was not nearly so good nor the range of groceries so wide.

That man lost money every day because of that "effect." He was, it can be easily believed, absolutely unconscious of it himself, and yet it was there, a tangible thing, tangible too, because it created an atmosphere that cost him money.

In each one of you is that power; it would be good for business, somewhere, if it were studied out and the cause removed.

THE DOCTOR GOT THE BUSINESS.

It is expedient that the merchant should at all times put on the appearance of business. People undoubtedly like to deal at the store where clerks are alert and where business is on the hum. What a bad impression it makes on a customer to enter a store where the clerks are leaning on the show cases, reading books, or in other ways presenting an appearance of dullness and sleepiness! Much better that they should be pulling down a counter or shelf display and rebuilding it, than standing listlessly around discussing the topics of the day.

Ten years ago a young doctor took up a practice in a town of 2,000 population, where there were already two doctors. He put out his sign and waited for business to come. But it failed to come his way, and he realized that something would have to be done if he were ever going to make a living. After a great deal of thought he decided to put on an appearance of business at any rate, and see if it would not do some good. Next morning he made several trips through the town with his satchel. He appeared to be busily engaged, as if he had so much to do that he could not spare a moment.

In the afternoon he got out his horse and took a hurried drive through several sections of the country. Sometimes, he drove so much that he found it necessary to hire livery horses.

The people saw him always on the go from early morning to late at night, and thought that he must be a pretty good doctor to be getting all this business. Very soon this young doctor had worked up an excellent practice, and all by merely putting on an appearance of business.

His experience should be a lesson to many grocers and clerks. If a merchant does not keep on the move and make a good showing, he will soon find the cobwebs collecting in his store. Busy clerks, good window and counter displays, a well loaded delivery waggon and all such things as these, make a store all the more attractive.

There is another point in regard to putting on a good appearance and that is in regard to the store front. If a coat of paint or a new walk will improve its look, do not hesitate at a little expense, for a dealer will be amply repaid. It is certainly false economy to allow the store front or any part of the store to become unattractive for want of the expenditure of a small amount of money.

On one day this week the visible supply of sugar in the world was 3,660,000 tons, an increase of 490,000 tons over the supply a year ago.

SHORT TALKS TO CLERKS

By An Ex-Clerk

Salesmanship.

Salesmanship is the fundamental basis of success in every line of business known to commerce.

When a great criminal lawyer faces the jury to plead his client's cause, what is he trying to do? SELL something!—Trying to sell that jury that his client is innocent. It is nothing else in the world but salesmanship.

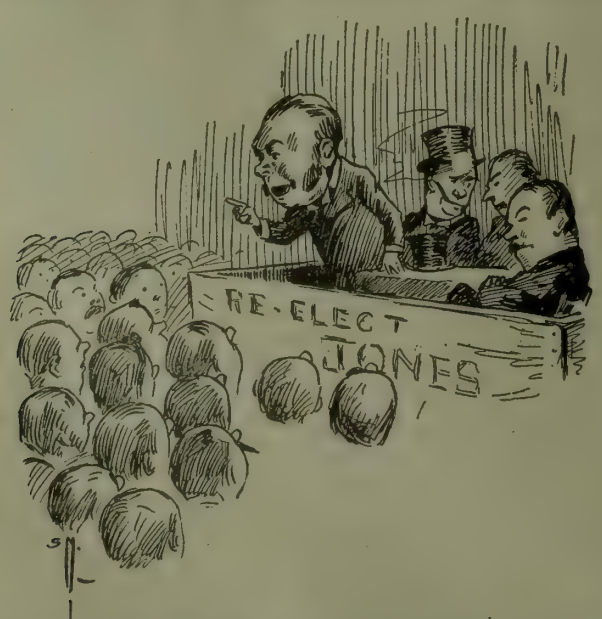
When a politician gets up in his constituency in front of an audience, for re-election, what is he trying to do? SELL something! Sell his audience that he is the man to be elected.

What am I trying to do? SELL you the facts of Salesmanship—sell you the importance of it. The majority of people use the word "tell" instead of "sell." There should be a word that will take them both in.

In a broad way, everyone is a salesman; and everyone is practising — or failing to practise, as the case may be — the principles of salesmanship, and these principles are simply the principles of influencing favorably and not unfairly the human mind. It is a salesman's business to change minds, to overcome prejudices, to break down bad customs, to soften stubbornness, and let the light of reason into dark places.

Is not life in general pretty much a matter of making other people feel as you do about something or other—about yourself, primarily?

Salesmanship is a science, and it is also an art. You can acquire it, and after once acquiring it then it is a question of its proper application. When you acquire the art of salesmanship you have an asset no one can take from you, or steal from you. It is YOURS.



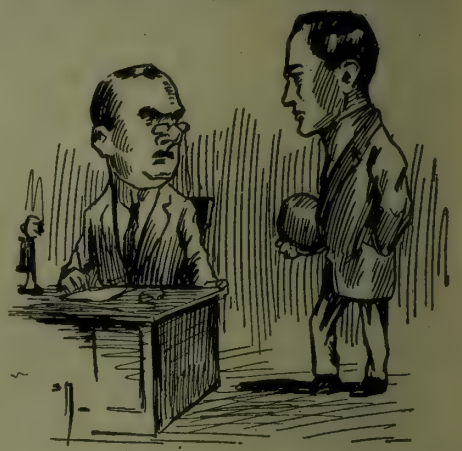
One important adjunct is necessary to apply it properly. When I say "apply it properly," what do I mean? I mean WORK. You may be the finest salesman in the world, the cleverest artist in selling goods that ever was known, but you must WORK, or your art is wasted.

Some Clerks Are Waiters.

There is a great difference between an ordinary clerk and a salesman in a retail store. Some clerks are simply waiters; they wait on people, give people what they want. Anyone can do that. A lady comes in and says, "I want a pound of coffee." It is not very much trouble to get her a pound of coffee.

The salary you command is in your own hands, namely, as to how good a salesman you are. How good a salesman you are depends on your ability and your willingness to learn. A clerk who is a good salesman will study all the advantages of salesmanship, grasp every opportunity and become a dividend payer for the house.

I don't believe there is a clerk but who, if he made up his mind, could sell one or two dollars' worth of goods more each day than he has been selling. That does not seem very much, but stop and figure it up for a minute—$2 a day; five clerks in the store; $10 per day; 20 p.c. profit; $2 a day net profit; 313 days in the year—$626 per year extra profit to the house? What does that mean? It means better salaries to those who work there and are good salesmen. It cannot mean anything else.



When a Politician Gets up in his Constituency for Re-Election He is "Selling" Something to His Audience.

You have something to sell. You come to me and you say, "I am a salesman. I want to go to work in your store." "Well," I say, 'how much do you want for six days per week of your salesmanship?" You say, "I want what I am worth to the store." "All right," I say, "come to work. At the end of the week I will tell you what you are worth. If you are a better salesman than anyone e'se in the store, you are going to get more money."

It is the same old problem over again —the supply and the demand. If I won't pay it to you, someone else will, and glad to do it.

In a certain instance, you find a young man who has not been a success, who is discouraged and does not think much of his chances for success. A salesman comes along and sells him something he needs. What is it? Why, a Course in Salesmanship.

"All right," I say, "Come to Work."

How Sales are Made.

A woman comes into your store, and the good salesman will welcome her as if he meant it; will say to her. "Good morning, Madam, what can I do for you? Do you want some coffee?" "Yes." He puts the coffee up, then says, "Here is a brand of cereal food which has been strongly recommended to us, and which we recommend to you. I believe you would like it. Try a package of this. and if not satisfactory please return it." Or, "We have some lovely fresh celery in to-day, which will soon be scarce," and so on, and so on. He sells her the cereal, he sells her the celery. How? He had studied his customer from her previous visits to the store, gradually acquiring that knowledge of human nature by a little extra effort, and that was all.

To be a successful salesman you must be able to analyze your customers, and I know of no walk in life where there are greater opportunities for this than in retail stores. You soon get to know the likes and dislikes of your customers. And think how important it is to the House that you are a good salesman. Competition is very keen; there are other stores cropping up around your locality; and as competition gets keener and keener, the greater is the need for good sales clerks. The clerk who can sell more goods than the other fellow is bound to get more money; he can command it. The clerk who is the best salesman has seldom indeed to ask for a raise in salary; he gets it; the house knows he is worth it; they do not want to lose him. Again, it only goes to show that clever sales clerks are scarce, and always will be scarce as long as you fail to appreciate the great advantage of more knowledge along these lines, and the important things I have taken up with you.

Two Varieties of Clerks.

In many cases, it simply resolves itself down once more to the differences between doing things right and doing them wrong. I go into retail stores every day, and you would be amazed at the way some things appear to me; they are awful! I went into a Gents' Furnishing Store, and, after waiting a minute or more, a clerk who was doing nothing walked up until he got opposite me, and said: "Anything you want?" Now, what do you think of that? Anything I want? What would I be doing in that store if I didn't want anything? I told him I wanted to see a tie of a certain shade. He picked one out, handed it to me and said, "That's a dollar." Then he started to look out the window at the passing street cars. I did not buy it.

I went into another store, and the clerk stepped up to me in a brisk, bright sort of a way and said, "Good day, sir! Is there anything I can show you that might interest you?" That was different. Here was a courteous and salesmanlike reception. I told what I wanted. He brought out many more ties than I required. Nothing seemed a trouble, and he never allowed his attention for a moment to be diverted from me. He took one of the prettiest ties, deftly folded it, and held it in position beneath his own collar, and said to me, "Does that not strike you as being about what you would like?" He saw I was sold, and before he was through sold me three shirts—just along the same tactful lines. That man will be in business some day and be a success.

I have heard retail clerks say, "O what is the use? What is the use of keeping yourself on the qui vive every minute? I have been getting $10 a week for a long while now, and I don't see any chance of getting any more." That is just the reason he has always been getting $10 a week. That man will never be a success.

Do you ever realize, you retail clerks, that when a merchant employs you he must place confidence in you? Do you realize what that responsibility is that he has placed on your shoulders?—Because you represent his place of business.

You may think you are smart if you can side-step some duties, and give them to others to do. You may think it clever to be able to fool your employer, and you CAN fool him, but for how long? A very short time, I assure you, and the only one who is getting fooled is yourself.

On the Successful Road.

The thing to do is to be influenced by successful clerks—clerks who are getting more money than you are—clerks who are selling more goods than you are; and if there are none in the store who surpass you, there are others in many other stores who do. And just along that line for a minute I will say, when you begin to reach the stage where, honestly speaking and eliminating all egotism, you have got a long way to look to find someone making more money than you are, or selling more goods than you are, you are fast getting towards the road to success.

Remember it takes a live fish to swim up stream; any old dead one can float down. Don't be influenced by the ones that float down! Don't be influenced by the average class! Set a standard as high as you possibly can, and be prepared to put in all the hard licks that are in you. Stick to it, day and night, early and late. Be willing to learn from others; be loyal to your employer; keep yourself in good health; be absolutely honest, and always in dead earnest, and you are sure of Success.

Practical Methods in Retail Stores

B. C. Trading Company Inaugurates Profit-Sharing Plan to Encourage Employes—Post Cards to Customers. A Rhyme Used to Attract Attention in Vancouver.

Employes Share in Profits.

Fernie, B.C., Feb. 23.—The Crow's Nest Trading Company, Ltd., of Fernie, has inaugurated a semi-annual profit-sharing plan to encourage their employes. For the past six months, $600 was distributed, which amount is over and above the profits distributed to those employes holding stock in the company, of which there are several. The next distribution will be in August.

In offering an incentive to its employes, the company claim to have been the gainer, for the business has been constantly growing. They state that, added to this is the goodwill which naturally follows when it is seen that the firm's success is to bring money to those who help to make it. The present building is to be enlarged and measures will also be taken looking to a greater extension. The company also issue a letter of appreciation to its staff—a thoughtful consideration if nothing else.

Coffee Display with a Rhyme.

Vancouver, B.C., Feb. 23.—Hallam & Wyndham, of this city, recently had a display of coffee in their window, with the following rhyme prominently displayed:

"I want to hear the simmer of the old coffee pot,
I want to hear it simmer when its getting good and hot;
I love the smell of roses along about in June,
And I'd hang about and listen to almost any tune,
But the fragrance and the music that nothing else has got.
Are the odor and simmer of the old coffee pot."

Value of Suggestion.

Halifax, N.S., Feb. 23.—Your correspondent, when looking over a number of orders that a local grocer had received, remarked that in but very few cases did the customer specify the brand of goods she wished. "They always leave it to me," said the grocer, "to choose the brand. You will generally find that a customer places enough dependence on the dealer to allow him to name the brand that she should use. Of course, we do have cases where a certain brand is asked for but if the customer has ever dealt with us before, she will generally take the kind we recommend. It was only yesterday that a customer asked me for a well advertised brand of jam. I do not carry that brand, one reason being that it does not pay enough profit, while the one I have is equally as good and gives me a fair percentage. Now I have tried both brands and find the one I carry just as good as the one the customer asked for and for that reason I recommended it to her and she purchased it. I find the same thing to happen very often but I am careful never to substitute an article that is not as high quality as the one asked for."

Post Cards for Customers.

Toronto, Feb. 23.—Doves, grocers and butchers, 102 Wilton avenue, have a system whereby they are able to keep a customer's trade no matter to what part of the city she may move. Orders are taken and deliveries made every day in the immediate neighborhood, and twice a week in the outlying districts, so that they are able to serve their patrons well. If a customer who lives near the store is moving to another district, they assure her that they can handle all her wants even there, by covering the ground twice a week for orders and by the telephone. They also have private post cards which they give to customers who live some distance away, so that if they need anything between order days and have not a telephone, they may send their orders on these post cards. If a customer sends for goods in the morning, the post card is received at the store that same day and the goods delivered promptly.

The Markets – Sugar Appears Strong

Dealers Think That Bottom Has Been Reached—Market Shows an Upward Tendency—Demand Brisker—Prunes Scarce and High in Price—Rice Has Advanced — Tomatoes are Higher in Toronto—Beans Firm in Winnipeg.

QUEBEC MARKETS

POINTERS—
Rice—Advance of ten cents.
Evaporated Apples—Very firm.
Prunes—Scarce and dear.

Montreal, Feb. 23.—One of the things grocers should remember during the next six weeks is that they are in the midst of the Lenten season and should endeavor to cater to those who observe that time. There is an increased business in what might be called meat substitutes. Fish enjoys a heavy demand, eggs are looked for more than before, and cheese, honey, jams, dried fruits, and other goods will find new purchasers, especially if the grocer endeavors to increase his trade by calling the attention of those in particular who are, as before mentioned, observing the Lenten season. The individual, of course, always follows his own ideas, but it should be of interest to him especially as there is the opportunity of new business.

During the week an advance of ten cents has been made in the price of rice. This was not altogether unlooked for as the primary market has been showing strength for some time. Evaporated apples are scarce and are high in price. They are in the same class with other dried fruits, prunes being especially scarce. There is a fairly good demand for sugar and in the primary market the price is slightly higher. The local market is described as steady.

Sugar.—The market is rather steady this week before conditions that show some improvement. Demand is better, and in the primary market prices are slightly advanced. The opinion is expressed that present indications point away from lower prices and that the bottom has been reached.

Syrups and Molasses.—The demand for molasses is good and in the primary market there are new signs of what are considered strength. Syrup is also moving out freely and a good season is being looked for with the beginning of March.

Dried Fruits.—Prunes are in small compass, some of the houses having less supplies than others. Evaporated apples, as was expected, are scarce. The price is decidedly high and it is safe to say that some of the dealers have practically no stock. Apricots are away up also. Practically all the lines in dried fruits are firm and in not a few cases the supplies are rather meagre. Demand is fairly good, but with prices ruling rather high a great deal is not expected.

Tea.—The tea market is fairly active with a good steady trade. There is special interest in colored teas and it is stated that holders of these in Canada have been responding to enquiries from the United States. In consequence the local market is active and Canadian purchasers have been getting their supplies in anticipation of higher prices or a shortage before the new crop is ready for the market.

Rice and Tapioca.—Quotations for rice were raised ten cents this week. The primary market has been considered strong for some time past and the advance was not altogether unlooked for in many places. It is expected that under the new prices the advance will help increase interest in business. Tapioca is steady.

CANNED GOODS

MONTREAL.—The canned goods business is practically the same as a week ago. Gallon apples are scarce and are quoted as high as $3.50. Peas are practically off the market and in a few other instances the same condition prevails. Canned goods are valuable property just now. In fish the trade is opening up better and where it was dull for some time an improvement has been noticed of late and a much better feeling prevails.

TORONTO.—The feature of the canned goods market is the big scarcity of both peas and tomatoes. A number of dealers have advanced tomato prices to $1.45, and as high as $1.50 is being asked in some cases, while others agree that present conditions warrant that quotation for them. So great is the scarcity in this market that quantities of tomatoes are being brought in from the United States market. Peas are also firm and standard are quoted at $1.35 to $1.40 per dozen. Prices in other lines, however, show no change. Trade in salmon and other canned fish is only normal, but wholesalers are looking for an improvement as soon as the Lenten season opens.

Winnipeg—A good demand still continues for all lines. Plums in heavy syrup are very scarce and stocks light which is likely to cause an advance before long. Early June peas are also scarce and are now quoted at $1.45. Tomatoes still scarce, and further advance is almost certain. Starch and cornmeal markets are the lowest they have been for many years, while existing market is extremely weak.

ONTARIO MARKETS

POINTERS—

Sugar—Demand reported good.
Prunes—Scarce.
Rice Standard B—Ten cents advance.
Tomatoes—Ten cents advance.

Toronto, Feb. 23.—Immediately after the holiday, the wholesale trade started at a very high speed and the satisfactory amount of trade done during January has had some effect on making the February business dull. However some firms report a slight improvement in business during the past week, while collections have been very good, considering the slackness in trade. The temporary period will give the wholesale trade time to make plans in the interest of their business.

Perhaps the one redeeming feature in the trade has been the big demand for sugar during the past week. Dealers agree that the bottom price has been struck and as the raw market is very strong, refined shows an upward tendency. One dealer in expressing his opinion said: "The sugar market is very strong and I expect an advance in price at any time."

No doubt if an advance takes place and retailers become firmly convinced that the trend is upward there will be a big rush to fill up stocks. The raw sugar market is now at 3.67, an advance of 25 cents over the quotations of the first of the month. The visible supply is 3,737,322 tons as against 3,235,952 tons last year or an increase of 501,370 tons.

Trade in syrups is brisk on account of the scarcity and high prices of dried fruits and the high prices of canned fruits. Prices are satisfactory, being lower than last year and retailers are evidently pushing that line. Trade in dried fruits is not overly brisk, retailers ordering only in small quantities for immediare needs.

An advance has taken place in standard B. rice which was not unexpected as a firmness has existed in this line in the primary market for some time, and the advance was only delayed by the absence of demand.

Canned goods are in a strong position and an advance has taken place in tomatoes, some dealers quoting them as high as $1.50 for 3's. Canned fish does not show any great briskness, but retailers are expected to take hold of this line in the near future.

Sugar.—No change has taken place in the price of sugar, but the general opinion seems to be that sugar has struck the bottom price and that indications point upward. The purchase of over 100,000 bags of raws at 3.67 or 25 cents above the lowest point for this during this season, would indicate an upward tendency. Owing to the improved conditions of the raw sugar markets of the world, the reduction in American refined which was looked for last week failed to materialize. From last week's quotations of 3.54, raws in New York have advanced to 3.67, at which figure big purchases were made. European beet sugar has exhibited another advance and is quoted ar 9s 9d f.o.b. Hamburg, which is equal to 4.04 duty paid New York or 37 cents per cwt. above Cuban quotations. The beet sugar market is however easy at the advanced price.

The demand for sugar just now is heavy as dealers believe that it is as low as can be expected for some time and sales have been free in anticipation of an advance.

Syrups and Molasses.—Conditions being very much in their favor this season, as dried and canned fruits are high in price, syrups are enjoying a lively trade, and business in this line is reported very much in excess of last year, when prices were higher than at the present. Some factories have had difficulty in getting orders out to retailers on account of the heavy snow storms, and dealers have been slightly inconvenienced in some cases. The trade in molasses continues with about the same demand, while prices show no change, but are steady.

Dried Fruits.—Among the dried fruits, prunes are particularly scarce and high in price. The scarcity is the greatest in the small sizes, while the large sizes are higher in price. Retailers should have no difficulty in selling the large size when they explain to customers that they are the cheapest in the end. Trade in the different lines shows no unusual activity; retailers buying for immediate needs only in most cases. The demand for raisins as is usual at this time of the year is light. Loose muscatels are rather scarce but there is little demand. On the coast seedless, and sultanas, are reported to be pretty well cleaned up and the market shows an upward tendency there. Currants are firm but the demand just now is slack.

Tea.—"During the past two or three years," said a dealer yesterday, "the price of bulk tea to the retail grocer has been increased from six to seven cents. The best teas, however, have not been affected as much as the lower grades." The reason given for this is that lower grades af tea grow on the low ground and this is where the rubber plant grows best, so that in the planting of rubber it has been the low grade teas that have been affected while the higher grades grow where the rubber plant does not thrive and have not been disturbed. There has also been an increase in the consumption of low grade teas and this has also helped to raise prices. Ceylon and India teas, which are practically the only kinds consumed in Canada, have been gradually rising in price, as Russia and the United States have been asking for these kinds.

Coffee.—Although speculative coffee continues to vary and at times shows easiness, still the statistical position is as strong as ever, and gives no hope to those who are delaying stocking in the hope that prices may show some reduction. The current Brazil crops are at an end and there is a long spell when the market must depend upon the small available stocks in home ports. The eyes af those interested are at present turned to the growing crops which will undoubtedly be an important factor in the question of prices. Local demand is normal with prices steady:

Rice and Tapioca.—Standard B. rice has been advanced 10 cents per cwt. during the past week, bringing the price up to $3.00. The higher grades for which there is not as much demand, have however not been affected, although a firmness is noticeable in Rangoon. Trade in this line continues fair.

Dried Fruits—Steady and scarce.

Beans—Advance expected.

Winnipeg, Feb. 23.—The expected rush is on hand, and orders which should have been shipped weeks ago, but which owing to the unsettled conditions of the weather, were delayed, are now being sent forth with great rapidity. The mild weather prevailing during the last few days has been of untold benefit to all wholesalers and jobbers in getting the condition of the trade in general back to an even level.

The presence of large number of visitors to the city during the week, attending the annual bonspiel, agricultural and other conventions, as well as the auto show, has resulted in large orders being delivered direct to the city houses to be forwarded with all haste.

Country roads throughout the northwest are just becoming traversible again and farmers are able to travel with greater comfort to the towns, which is resulting in a general brightening up of trade in all lines.

Prices during the week have held unusually firm and dried pears and citron peel are the only lines to have advanced during the week.

Sugars—The raw sugar market continues to advance, and quite a flurry took place on the New York market yesterday. The market here, however, owing to the large stocks at present on hand remains firm. This recent scare of higher prices has induced the buying of many car loads by local retailers, while from country points many large orders are arriving, and it would appear as if retailers were stocking fairly heavily. While difference of opinions prevails regarding the way the market will go, the majority predict that a slight advance will take place shortly.

Beans and Peas.—Considerable interest is being taken in the bean market at present, as it is thought that if the reciprocity agreement with the United States is passed the market here will advance about 25 cents per bushel, as American packers pay that amount of duty on beans shipped from Canada into their country. And even with this duty in existence, owing to the demand being greater than the supply, the American packer has had to import Canadian beans and has been very active in so doing for the last two or three years. Peas are rather uncertain and a difference of opinion prevails regarding the effect of free trade on the pea market. In the meantime, however, prices remain firm.

NOVA SCOTIA MARKETS.

Halifax, Feb. 23.—The grocery trade is fairly brisk for the season of the year. In several lines prices are easier than they have been for some time, and as a consequence larger sales are reported.

Sugar prices are away down. Extra standard granulated is now quoted at $4.35; United Empire, at $3.25; Austrian granulated, at $4.25; bright yellow, $4.15; No. 1 yellow, $3.85, and unbranded, $3.70.

There has been quite a drop in the price of eggs, and fresh laids are now coming on the market in fairly good supply. New laid eggs can now be purchased for 28 cents per dozen. Case eggs are quoted at 27 cents, but the demand is light.

Cheese is firm and prices are slightly higher, twins being quoted at 13½ to 14, and large at 13 to 13½.

The butter markets hold fairly firm though supplies are coming in a little better. Some small shipments of dairy butter in small tubs reached the market this week.

Apples are very scarce. All the cheap stock has been cleaned up and the best apples are selling at $5.50. There is a firm market for potatoes at $2 per barrel, and cabbages have been advanced from $1 to $1.50 per dozen.

BRITISH COLUMBIA MARKETS.

Vancouver, Feb. 23.—Kansas eggs are sweeping the market here. Kansas is an ideal country for chicken raising and with the favorable climate more eggs are produced per hen than even in California. Kansas eggs are coming in here laid down at 22 cents, the cost being 15 cents in Kansas, while its competitor from California costs 34 cents here, being 30 cents at point of shipment. The quality is represented to be fine, besides. The duty now is three cents a dozen, but, according to local men, with reciprocity there will be that much more in their favor, with the result that the chicken rancher in British Columbia will be forced out of the market, except for a short time while eggs are high. In the end they claim it will mean that eggs will be little cheaper, but the money will go to the United States instead of to owners of small holdings in British Columbia.

Considerable Australian and New Zealand butter is coming into the city. On Tuesday one company received a consignment of 2,600 cases via San Francisco. This is jobbed at 32c. The quality is said to be good.

Indications are that cold weather is past, which will mean no high prices in potatoes and other vegetables. The past month has been disagreeable, with storms, but not cold. Had a cold snap set in, it is not improbable that a cable would have been sent to Japan for potatoes. The samples received from that country were of excellent quality.

Mail Order House and the Country Dealer

Story of How the Neglect of Small Town Retailer to Stock Shelves Brought About Invasion by City Houses, and How, in Turn, He Filled up With Every Article to Hold His Customers —Where Personality Counted.

Through the neglect of a general merchant in failing to stock up his shelves with goods his customers needed, mail order house goods were introduced into a little Ontario town of 1,500 inhabitants a short time ago. The new business gradually expanded until the thrifty housewife was sending down for such large consignments that the merchant came at last to realize that the very foundation of the business he had built up with much care and labor to himself, was in danger.

Driven desperate, he at last decided that he would stock up with goods, so varied in character that it would be no longer necessary for his old customers to pass his store, and take up the city dealer's catalogue.

Extent of the Trade.

He discovered then that the ravages of the Mail Order House had been greater than first supposed. The women of his town had gone so far as to make up twenty-five dollar orders, so that the freight charges could be eliminated. Said he: "I'll put in a stock of goods that the people in town will have no excuse for sending away for goods; even if some of the articles are not asked for once in six months. When they come for them, I'll have the goods to sell them."

His idea was to put in a stock of all articles that his customers desired and he figured that when the people knew he had the goods, a trade for them would soon spring up. He knew that by carrying all lines, he would get business because the people liked to deal at a store where they could get any article they wanted.

A Small Mail Order House.

So he started in with nearly all the articles kept by a small mail order house. He had behind him that great resource that the mail order houses have not, personality. He was a friend and adviser to all his customers. If a man had trouble he sympathized with him and offered his best advice. If a farmer had some bad luck that put him behind financially, this was the merchant who assured him that he would not crowd him for his bill, and the story is told that on one occasion, he spent an afternoon putting up the stove pipes for an old lady customer who lived alone. His trade grew immensely,

Why Not Get After ALL Your Tea Trade?

You ought to be selling on an average twenty-five pounds of tea a year to every family that does business with you. If you are not, some wide-awake competitor or possibly a peddler is doing a part of your tea trade.

Look into it and you'll find that the man who has part of your tea trade is pushing 40c. tea, or better. You can get that trade AND SOME MORE by pushing the 40c. grade of Red Rose. Try it in your home and you will agree there is no other tea at the price to compare with it. You can guarantee the quality.

Just try pushing 40c. tea and continued to grow and his store was a busy place.

But even with the large business, this merchant did not make money. He realized the fact himself, but could not find the reason.

Took in a Partner.

So he took a bright young man of the same town into partnership with him, hoping that he would solve the mysterious disappearance of profits. The young partner soon hit upon the right trail. He analyzed the business and found that the merchant had not been paying enough attention to buying. Although the plan of having everything customers asked for was a good one, he found that too large quantities had been bought. There would be a six dozen case of some article of which he sold probably only 1 dozen in a year, and this, to a certain extent, was carried out in nearly all lines. It had a paralyzing effect upon the business. The plan of buying in small quantities was introduced. It was also found that enough attention was not directed to clearing out odd lines, and when this defect had been overcome, the business was put on a firm footing.

Lard is Easier, with Slight Reductoin

Live Hogs Show No Change in Price—The United States Market Slightly Firmer—Another Decline in Egg Prices — Consumption Has Increased With Lower Prices — Butter Market is Steady—Cheese is Quiet.

A normal trade for this season in all kinds of pork products is reported from most centres, with prices on the whole showing but little change. The price of hogs in Canada is about the same as last week, the easiness noted last week having been overcome to a certain extent by the reaction in United States prices. Hogs, in the States, slumped last week under big arrivals and the expectation of larger shipments. The market, however, has reacted to a certain extent this week as the supply has been much smaller than expected. It is easy at the advance as the opinion is that there are plenty of hogs in the country but that the farmers are holding them back. The English bacon market is also reported easy and quiet. Pure lard is easier this week with slight reductions in some cases.

Eggs are easy and continue to decline, from the same causes that have been forcing the market downward during the past six weeks. Receipts are larger than at this time last year and quantities are still being brought in from the United States markets. There is no large quantity of storage eggs being imported now, as Canadian storage men, realizing small chance of higher prices for a time, are offering them at equal urices to American firms. Lower prices have had the result of causing a greater demand for eggs. In British Columbia, California eggs have been brought in for some time at a lower price than the local article, but now supplies are being brought in from Kansas which are very much lower than even those from California.

Butter, while arriving in fairly large quantities at some markets, is becoming scarce at others. Prices remain steady and seem to show greater strength at some points. A fair demand keeps up, mostly for good quality, the poorer grades selling very slowly. Small quantities of butter are being shipped from eastern points to the west to supply the demand there.

The cheese market is quiet, but prices show no easiness, as supplies of cheese are limited. The English market is reported also quiet with stocks light, finest Canadian cheese quoted at 61s. to 63s.

Poultry from time to time shows some revival in trade at the different centres but on the whole continues quiet, the demand for fresh killed keeping well up to supplies, while the limited supply of storage is gradually being cleaned up.

MONTREAL.

Provisions.—A number of price changes are noticeable this week. Pure lard is a little easier and in the other lines the changes are in both directions depending upon the supply in that particular direction.

Butter.—The butter market seems to be growing stronger. Creamery is now being supplied from the centres and the smaller towns and countryside is dependent upon the rather limited stocks that are being held in Montreal. There is plenty of dairy butter but the big houses are refusing it. The fact is that there is no demand for it, and even the lumber camps which have been taking considerable of it are beginning to refuse it. This shows the extent to which the public taste has been cultivated toward creamery butter. One of those in close touch with the local market says that with normal consumption, and with the receipts equal to those of last year at this season there is going to be a shortage of from 10,000 to 15,000 packages before the new supplies are received. This refers to Montreal and the surrounding places alone, and it is felt that the conditions that are prevailing here and are likely to prevail must obtain throughout the entire country. This same dealer stated that there is about one package of dairy butter sold now where formerly 200 packages were sold.

Eggs.—Prices continue to decline. Receipts are heavy for this time of the year and the easier prices have had the effect of bringing the demand up to an appreciable figure. The receipts are much in advance of those at this time last year. It is a question whether first attempts at organization have had anything to do with the present supplies or whether it is due to the efforts to secure supplies at this season when in the past they were always scantiest. It is believed that the price of eggs this summer will be below those of last year largely on account of the decline coming so early in the season.

Provisions.—Trade continues active and prices steady. A sharp decline had taken place in all grades of lard owing to a weakening of the American markets. Corn fed cattle, at this period of the year, are always rushed to the packers which consequently results in a decline. New prices are therefore quoted. Cured and salt meats remain steady and unchanged.

Provisions.—The trade in provisions continues fairly good. Live hogs, the supply of which is only normal, continue at the same price as last week. The easiness in the hog market is not as noticeable as last week as the United States markets, which slumped then have reacted slightly. The easiness in lard has resulted in another slight reduction and in pails, the pure article is quoted at 12 to 12¼ cents. Long clear bacon is enjoying a fair trade.

be seen. There is a difference of opinion existing as to the future in butter. Some dealers believe that all the present supplies will be needed within the next few months at prices at least as high as quoted at present. There are others again, who believe that the quantity in storage is large enough to keep the price down for a time at least.

Eggs.—The price of eggs has been reduced another notch and this costly luxury of six weeks ago should soon become a common article of food at present prices. New laids are now quoted at 23 to 24 cents, while the storage article can be had for 15c to 16c. The United States markets are still well supplied at very low prices, and while this continues, prices here will show no improvement as large quantities are being imported from the United States cities. Some dealers believe that local holders have considerable storage eggs on hand, waiting for the market to react. The demand for eggs is good, but it is expected that as soon as the retail grocers reduce their prices that the consumption will be much larger.

PICKLE AND OLIVE WINDOW.

The following method of displaying pickles and olives in a window was recently described by a grocer: The window is fitted with three steps, each step being about the height of the pickle bottle to be used. These steps are covered over with cheese cloth loosely folded. This effect can be improved if cheese cloth of different colors is used on each step—say red, white and blue. Each step is devoted to one line of pickles or olives, which are not stood straight up, but are allowed to slope with the tops resting against the back of the step, and the bottles lying in the creases and folds of the cheese cloth. On the centre of each step is placed a ticket bearing the price of the line exhibited on that shelf.

The MacLaren Imperial Cheese Co., who have been doing a large business in Canada and the United States for a number of years are continually getting closer to the trade by opening new offices. They have now decided to open an office in Montreal by the first of April. Already they have offices in New York, Detroit, and Chicago, under their own management, and in Canada, at Toronto and Woodstock. Their new office in Montreal will be under the management of J. R. F. Fisher who is well known to the Montreal trade and it will be located at 81 Youville Square, their telephone number being, Main 7178. In addition to the Imperial products such as, MacLaren's Imperial cheese, Canadian Cream cheese, Roquefort cheese, Imperial Pimento cheese, peanut butter, prepared mustard, Imperial oils, Imperial desert jelly, they will handle a full line of imported cheese such as, Swiss, Roquefort, Camembert, English Stilton, Edam, Pine Apple, Limberger, and Brick Cream cheese, etc. They also represent Maconochie Bros., London, Eng., manufacturers of pickles, preserves, fish, peel, etc. The Snider Preserving Co., of Cincinnati, who manufacture catsup, chili sauce, etc.; Knorrs, Ltd., manufacturers of soup squares, dried vegetables, etc.; The Redio Co., Ltd., London, Eng., makers of the celebrated metal cleaning and polishing cloths, etc. The MacLaren Imperial Cheese Co. in opening these various offices aims to supply the trade to the best advantage and at the same time to give the manufacturers it represents the best possible service. From the success which Henry Wright, the manager of this company has attained in the past there is every reason to believe that the Montreal office will be a splendid acquisition to the many fine Montreal business houses.

Fussell's cream, lately introduced to the Canadian market, is meeting with approbation. It is simply a pure, natural, rich cream, equal in every respect to the finest Devonshire cream. Put up in sterilized tins, it is guaranteed free from preservatives and will keep good for any reasonable time in any climate.

The Johnson Richardson Co., of Montreal, publish a pretty amusing incident in their advertisement in this issue. Our readers ought to refer to it and become acquainted with the old method of distinguishing whether cloth contains cotton or wool.

From St. John, N.B., comes the news that Gilbert W. Ganong, Arthur D. Ganong, and Beverley Stevens, of St. Stephen; J. Herbert Emery, of St. John and George H. McAndrews, of Calais, are applying for incorporation as White's Limited, with a capital stock of $150,000 and principal place of business at St. John, for the purpose of carrying on a manufacturing confectionery business. An offer has been made for the business and stock of the White Candy Co.

Grocers: The reputation of manufacturers depends upon the quality of their goods. Manufacturers of bulk and private brands of baking powder are unlike the manufacturers of some special brand of baking powder on which thousands of dollars are spent in advertising, as the latter's success depends entirely upon maintaining the high standard of quality of their goods.

Dullness Continues in Flour Trade

Export Demand Shows No Improvement — Domestic Trade Keeps Up Fairly Well—Prices Show No Change Over Last Week—Wheat is a Little Easier—Flour Market Uncertain — Cereals are Steady.

There has been no change in the price of flour during the past week, but wheat has shown another slight decline, and May wheat in Chicago is now quoted at 91⅜, being a drop of 5 cents in two weeks and of 11 cents in the past month on that market, while No. 1 northern in Winnipeg has shown 5 cents decline during the past month. Differences of opinion still exist as to how the flour market will act, or whether it will change at all for a time.

Millers do not at least look for higher wheat prices, until the world's supply of wheat has been materially reduced, while a lower level may be seen on the basis of supply and demand. The Canadian visible supply of wheat, at present, is 9,970,000 bushels, compared with 8,189,000 bushels last year, while the world's visible supply is 18,000,000 bushels larger than at the same time in 1910. The world's visible wheat supply is now larger than at any time since 1895.

The trade in flour throughout Canada continues at a low level and in most centres shows very little improvement over last week. Domestic trade is keeping up fairly well but it is pointed out that this trade varies very little, as consumers are not interested enough to buy according to market conditions. There has, however, been but little enquiry for Canadian flour from European markets during the past week.

The demand for flour in the United States is also very dull and slightly lower prices have been named, but this has had little effect in increasing trade. A recent report from the United States says, "The poor demand for flour has without doubt been largely owing to the course of wheat since jobbers never take hold while the market is weak, and if there are indications of a decline, it generally stops their buying altogether. As soon as the wheat market shows strength and holds its position long enough to inspire confidence in the minds of jobbers and bakers, trade will improve with the mills. At present there is very little doing in export trade."

Trade in cereals at most centres is normal and prices in both rolled oats and rolled wheat seem to be steady.

MONTREAL.

Flour.—There is no new feature to the flour market. Prices show no change. The demand shows no improvement and the present business is largely of a local character. The stock of flour in store on spot on Monday showed an increase of 7,813 barrels compared with a week ago and an increase of 4,312 with a year ago. The flour market across the border has dropped lightly owing to the dullness that has prevailed for some time.

Rolled oats.—Business in this line is well maintained. Prices are steady and demand is good. There is no feature to report and the market seems to be steady.

WINNIPEG.

Flour.—There was a fairly good domestic demand for flour last week. Delayed orders are being shipped out and millers report large orders to be still coming in. Export demand for flour was rather quiet. Prices quoted at present are :

1st Patents, per cwt	2 90
2nd Patents per cwt	2 75
Strong Bakers, per cwt	2 60

Cereals.—A large demand exists for rolled oats and oatmeal. Rolled oats are still selling at $2 per sack of 80 pounds, and standard and granulated oatmeal at $2.50.

TORONTO.

Flour.—Prices, during the past week, have undergone no change. Manitoba wheat has been reduced 1½ cents and is now quoted at 99 cents. While some are looking for a reduction in flour prices on account of the easiness in wheat and also the slackness in trade which might cause some millers to cut prices, still there are others who expect present prices to hold for a time. It is argued that flour prices did not advance when wheat went up in January and therefore no reduction can be looked for unless wheat declines further.

While it was thought, that on account of the slackness in business, some of the big mills might cut prices in order to stimulate trade, it is a question whether that would have the desired effect, as there is very little enquiry for flour from outside even at reduced prices. Ontario wheat has gone down and is quoted at 82 to 83 cents.

Cereals.—Trade in cereals continues about the same, some mills reporting that business is none too brisk. Oat prices are unchanged and therefore rolled oats remain steady at present prices. There is nothing out of the usual in rolled wheat, but cornmeal is just now enjoying a brisk trade. Mills report that enquiry for rolled oats for export has shown no improvement of late.

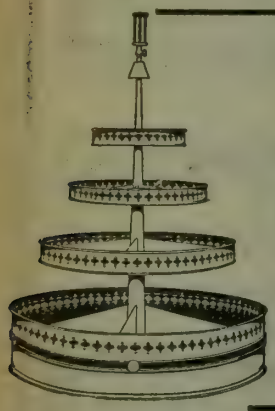
ROLLED OATS WINDOW.

A simple rolled oats window may be arranged as follows : at the front, close to the glass, a row of package oats, lying down, is placed. Behind this, in the centre, there comes a barrel on its side, containing rolled oats, and with a quantity slopping out of the mouth and on to the window floor. At the side of the loose rolled oats on both sides can be placed 25c worth of bulk rolled oats done up in a paper package with a ticket, "This Amount for 25c." Back of this on both sides, a couple of empty paper bags standing up with the inscription on the side : "7 lb. for 25c." or whatever price you are selling at. Back of this on each side of the barrel is placed a pyramid of package oats. The display is completed by a large show card on the top of the barrel with the inscription, "Freshly Milled—7 lb. for 25c."

First Outing of Grocers' Section at Halifax, N.S.



Halifax, Feb. 23.—Speech making of a high order marked the initial outing of the Retail Grocers' Association of this city, which was held to the Florence Hotel, Millview, at the latter end of last week. One hundred retailers and their guests, were present, and the event was thoroughly enjoyed by all. Edward Hubley, president of the Halifax branch, who presided, acted as toast master in efficient fashion.

H. G. Bauld, one of the oldest wholesale grocers of this city, in responding to the toast of "The Wholesalers' Trade," gave in interesting fashion some reminiscences of bygone days. As he concluded he expressed the opinion that the retail grocer could not successfully do business without the wholesaler. By working together, in harmony, he said, both would greatly benefit.

In speaking to "The Retail Trade," Mr. Smith touched upon the question of cost and profits and compared present conditions with those of former days. W. H. Hart, J. J. Skerry and Mr. Banks, also spoke briefly to this toast.

The toast of "The Manufacturers and Manufacturers' Agents" was spoken to by Mr. Rankine, A. J. Davis, and C.E. Choat. The latter provoked a storm of applause by his rendition of a recitation entitled "The Grocers' Heaven."

Other speakers were F. A. Miles, manager of the National Drug Company; C. E. Ritchie, and J. C. Lithgow.

Why Does The American Want Free Wheat?

Big and hungry are the mills at Minneapolis.
And to be fed economically much flour must they make for export.

And to meet the "quality" competition of the Canadian millers in the British market they seek to flour our Canadian wheat, don't you see.

Because Manitoba No. 1 Hard—the Red Fife kind—is the sturdiest, healthiest, primest wheat that grows.
Superlative in every way.

And the keen, aggressive Yankee grinding the Manitoba strength-giving berry with his own inferior wheat will compete for our export trade.

To hoist us with our own ammunition.

That's what the American thinks of the Manitoba wheat. It's what he knows.

Think, Brother Grocer, what a magnificent flour FIVE ROSES must be.

Milled from the very cream of the Manitoba harvest.

Every bushel selected by our own expert buyers at country elevators.

Direct from the farmer's wagon.

Wheat that our own experts have seen seeded, grown, threshed.

Wheat they have known intimately from birth to sturdy maturity.

So FIVE ROSES, you see, is milled from "wagon wheat" —the only wheat that has never passed through many hands.

And the wheat that makes FIVE ROSES, Brother Grocer, has never known bad company or evil environment.

And you can say to your trusting customer in all sincerity:
"Madam, I stake my reputation on FIVE ROSES. It is "milled from specially selected Manitoba wheat, the top "of the crop. Guaranteed by the Lake of the Woods, call- "ed the 'House of Character.' "

Your sincerity carries weight—FIVE ROSES bears you out.

That's Confidence, Brother Grocer.

And having her Confidence, you can sell her anything.

Remember this: FIVE ROSES builds up Confidence.

the Grocer Who Knows Stocks

CHRISTIE'S

Because They Are the Best

¶ The superiority of Christie Biscuits is unquestioned. Since particular women from coast to coast call Christie Biscuits "The Best Baked" and "The Purest of all Pure Foods," the reasons for the wise Grocer's preference are self evident.

¶ There's just one surety of biscuit purity—right inspection of every ingredient entering into the "bakes," combined with cleanly, scientific baking under modern and sanitary conditions.

¶ CHRISTIE BISCUITS are the best and purest because we take every precaution that makes for biscuit perfection. For fifty years we have endeavored to bake the best biscuits—we have been insistent on high grade quality—we have constantly improved our facilities until to-day our big factory is known as the cleanest and most modern in all Canada.

¶ All our energies have been concentrated in the making of better biscuits. The name "CHRISTIE" is not only a surety of biscuit purity, but also a household word all over the Dominion.

Almeria Grapes Scarce in Montreal

Practically None to be Had—Montreal Potatoes Still Hold Around $1.25 Mark—Marmalade Oranges Have Sold Well—California Orange Shipments are Still Large—Grape Fruit Shows Improvement in Quality—Better Demand Also.

The trade in fruits is fairly well distributed over the most important lines which the average merchant handles. Trade in oranges keeps at a high level, backed by the good quality and fair prices of the fruit, the advertising of the packers, and the attention which most retailers are giving at present to this line. The shipments from California still keep up well, 165 carloads of oranges and 16 of lemons being sent out in one day, on February 14, making a total of 10,260 carloads for the season to that date. What marmalade oranges that have been brought to the different markets have been taken up well at prices which would allow them to be sold to the consumer at a fair price.

Grapefruit shows an improvement in quality and dealers are giving more attention to this line than they have been, and are pushing its sale in conjunction with the sale of oranges. Lemons remain firm with a fair trade passing.

Supplies of apples seem to be plentiful enough at the present high prices which keeps the demand from becoming very large. A recent report from Liverpool, England in regard to apples, says that choicest quality Baldwins, Spies, Greenings, Canadian Reds and Seeks are bringing 20s. to 23s.; Golden Russets, 24s. to 28s.; Ben Davis, 17s. to 21s., and Starks, 20s. to 24s. The report says the market opened weak and closed the same, demand not equal to supply.

MONTREAL.

Green Fruits.—There is a scarcity of Almeria grapes and practically none are to be had. The price is reported to be around $12 and $13 in New York. The season is well advanced now, but the situation has reached such a position that the price is going too high. One dealer stated that it should not be long until practically any price can be obtained. Enquiries are coming in for these grapes, but there is not a strong tendency to meet the present demand. Cranberries are a little cheaper as are also strawberries.

Green Fruits.—There is nothing of special importance in green fruits this week, trade remaining normal with prices unchanged. Another shipment of marmalade oranges was received last week and have been going out freely at the prevailing price, $2.50 to $2.75 per case. The present is a good season for lemons and trade is held well by the good quality of the lemons arriving. Grapefruit is enjoying a fair trade, retailers having apparently taken hold of this line again as the quality of the fruit is much better than that at the beginning of the season. Strawberries are selling fairly well considering the time of the year or rather the price, which still keeps at 50 to 55 cents. Rhubarb is on the market at $1 per dozen.

Vegetables.—Trade is normal in all lines of vegetables, with steady prices. For potatoes, just now, a steady and satisfactory demand keeps coming in. Supplies of Spanish onions are plentiful and the demand is good, retailers having turned to this line as home grown, besides being very scarce, are hard to sell at the present price, $1.75 per bag. California celery keeps moving out fairly well, while other imported vegetables are in fair demand for this season.

Point Out Food Value of Dried Fruits and Nuts

For those merchants who are not following the old idea of giving up the fruit and nut trade immediately after the holiday season but who are still keeping up their stocks and endeavoring to increase sales in these lines, it will be well to remember the great food value of both fruit and nuts as it will aid to a great extent in making sales.

Many people have the idea that fruits are taken more for the agreeable taste than for the benefit to the system, whereas the best and hardest of work can be done on a meal of fruit. There are several reasons why fruit is important as a food. It is itself a food, a complete and full nutriment for the body; it is of essential value in assisting other foods to be digested, and is of the utmost value in helping the body to eliminate waste matter. In some forms of disease fruit is given because it is both curative and nutritive.

Why for ages have people eaten apple sauce with their roast goose?

Simply because the acids in the fruit assist in digesting the fats so abundant in this kind of food. Impress upon your customers the great value of fruit as nourishment for the body, and use the facts in such a manner as to increase the consumption of this line.

The importance of nuts and fruit butter, as food, is becoming better known every day. People have in the past been used to ravenous eating of nuts during the holiday season with bad effects and they come to the belief that nuts were indigestible, but this is true of all food that is not properly masticated. Walnuts and peanuts are rich in proteid and are excellent food. Nuts are far too little known, nevertheless they are of great importance and are readily digestible when care is taken in mastication.

Of course, keeping up a large stock in nuts and fruits will not sell them if they are not well displayed and even display will not sell, so that it rests on the merchant and clerks whether sales increase in these lines. Keep your fruit prominent and in a splendid condition, with a liberal use of cards in describing the fruit and giving prices.

Nuts will not sell either, if placed under the counter and no attention paid to their sale by the clerks. They should be prominently exhibited on trays on the counter with a good large quantity exposed to view so that the customers will not think that it is a few left-overs from Christmas, that you are trying to get rid of. The addition of price cards and suggestions from the clerks will help in making sales.

Fish Dealers are Preparing for Lent

Retailers are Stocking up for Lent, Which Opens on Wednesday Next—Trade is Good—Some Scarcity is Noted in Salt Fish—Frozen Fish are in Good Supply—Dealers Should Look After Oyster Trade.

During the greater part of last week the leading fish dealers were forced to buy from United States ports supplies of fresh fish. But on Monday of this week a generous supply was offered from Digby, N.S., and immediately it was taken advantage of. About 100,000 of this fresh fish, composed largely of haddock and cod, are known to have been accepted, and proved a welcome addition of the market this week.

On Wednesday next Lent opens and one sign of its approach is to be seen in belated orders that are now coming in. Trade is decidedly active and apparently quite a number of retailers have delayed sending in their orders until the last moment. The result is a market rush.

Salt fish are scarce, as was pointed out last week and this is especially noticeable in green cod and Labrador herring in barrels. All kinds of frozen fish are in good supply and the tendency of the trade on account of this condition of demand and supply is to use fresh frozen where formerly salted fish was more largely used.

Stormy weather has interfered with the lobster catch of late and as a result Canadian lobsters are scarce and are quoted at from five to ten cents higher. Retailers should not overlook the opportunity to sell oysters during the next six or seven weeks. The demand is bound to be greater and with a little extra work business can be greatly increased. Supplies are coming forward freely.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

St. John.—The weather during the last week has been a little less severe and consequently there has been a fair supply of fresh fish. Haddock and cod are coming in fairly well; there is a fair supply of smelts from the north shore, some gaspereaux are being taken through the ice on the Kennebeccasis and St. John rivers, and a few small herring have been coming in from Grand Manan, while larger fish are received from Newfoundland. Some Alaskan halibut is now on the market, though it is sold as British Columbia stock, as it all comes to the dealers from the Pacific coast, under that head.

The smelt fishing season on the north shore closed Wednesday, February 15, and taking the season all through the catch has not been as large as in previous years.

The provincial government is seeking control of the inland fisheries of the province, which are now under the federal authorities.

QUEBEC.

Montreal.—Fillets are scarce and are marked off the market by the leading dealers, who are unable to get sufficient supplies. Green cod are also decidedly scarce and are practically off the market for the rest of the season. Labrador herrings in barrels are also limited in supply and they too are practically off the market. As noted above lobsters are scarce and dearer. Supplies have been curtailed by stormy weather interfering with operations. The result is an advance in quotations. Finnan haddies are plentiful and are meeting a heavy demand. The supply of frozen fresh fish is also good. On the whole business is good and orders are coming in satisfactorily.

ONTARIO.

Toronto.—Trade in fish is extremely good and with present conditions and the outlook for the next seven weeks, dealers are well satisfied. They state they are getting orders from retailers who handle fish at no other time of the year, but during the lenten season and who are already getting in supplies to have a little start in developing the trade before Lent arrives. Supplies of all kinds of fish are quite plentiful, with the exception of fillets and ciscoes, which are held in limited quantities only. Stocks of smoked and boneless fish are quite heavy, showing that dealers expect a good trade in that line. At present there is a good demand for pickled fish, Labrador and pickled lake herrings being the leaders. However under the favorable weather conditions, trade in fresh frozen fish is keeping up to a higher standard, halibut, trout and salmon taking a prominent position. Prices show no change from last week.

NOVA SCOTIA.

Halifax.—The situation in regard to the fish trade shows practically no improvement. There is a marked scarcity of "fresh and salt fish at all the important centres in the province. No great improvementt is looked for until the weather conditions change and the fishermen are able to reach the grounds. The presence of ice at some points along the coast has also helped to retard the operations of the fishermen.

According to advices from Cape Breton there is a fish famine in that part of the province. No fresh fish are being landed, and practically all those cured during the past season have been disposed of to parties abroad. Outside of some small lots of fish at Ingonish, no stocks are held.

Three vessels arrived here this week with cargoes of fish. One brought fresh and frozen herring, and another dry fish, both from Newfoundland, while the third schooner was from Lunenburg, her cargo consisting of nine hundred quintals of bank fish. Orders had been placed for all this fish before it was landed here. The foreign markets are firm, and the demand about the average for the season.

Herring are a little firmer, but outside of these prices are unchanged.

TROUBLE CAUSED BY ONE LETTER

A Kansas newspaper office was shot into with buckshot the other day by a local grocer, because of a little mistake in the grocer's ad; when it should have said, "A fresh stock of dairy butter daily," the printer used an "h" instead of a "d" in the word "dairy." The printer takes more chances than any man on earth.

Schools of Herring Defy all Computation

Indisputable Evidence That Numbers of This Fish are Not Diminishing—Inability of Experts to Locate Them Because of Migratory Habits—Improved Methods of Fishing in Maritime Provinces Would Probably Treble Catch—Fifth Article of a Series.

By A. M. Payne.

Schools of herring covering six square miles and even larger deep water areas are on record. Huxley, universally admitted as one of the foremost authorities during his life time, estimated that there are scores of such schools in the North Atlantic, any single one of which would supply the whole world's consumption at any given time.

Approximate estimates of the world's catch can be designated in figures for ordinary comprehension, but the individual numbers of these finny resources of the sea defy computation. Imagination, however, yields to actual facts, within living memory.

Beach Strewn at Crail.

Near the Village of Crail, on the east coast of Fife, as narrated in the British Naturalist, a strong southeast gale strewed the beach for miles with banks of herring several feet high. Outside the town limits, the people took them in baskets as they pleased. In Crail, the town crier proclaimed that "Caller Herring" i.e., herring fresh out of the sea, might be had forty for a penny. As the tide rose, the fish accumulated so rapidly that the crier's note was changed to a shilling a cartload. Successive waves, however, soon led the crier to shout that they could be taken gratis. When the waters did ebb, the corporation offered a shilling reward for every cartload removed. The fish were in prime condition, barely dead. In spite of the use of every grain of salt in the town and neighborhood, not a thousandth part of the mass was saved.

It may be argued, that half a century's incessant fishing must have depleted nature's supply, and that such a lavish sacrifice of valuable food could not be witnessed in the present day. Although the Crail incident was in the nature of a revelation, somewhat similar experiences have occurred on our own coasts, when schools of fish have been driven shorewards in such immense numbers, as to overtax every modern method of securing nature's bounties within immediate reach. Estimates are of course largely conjectural, but economic students of repute merit the credit of definite scientific research. The U. S. pamphlet by Hugh M. Smith, previously referred to, estimated the annual herring catch of the world in 1903 at a billion and a half pounds, valued at twenty-five and a quarter million dollars. Some regard this estimate as under the mark.

The point intended to be proved being conceded, that the supply of herring in the North Atlantic is practically inexhaustible, the question arises as to their frequent disappearance from former haunts, on both sides of the ocean. Various reasons are advanced, among other supposed causes, naval guns and torpedo practice, fog and siren signals, submarine bells, etc., the noise and disturbance of lobster fishing, unusual prevalence of off shore gales, continuous unfavorable weather conditions, steam trawling, diminution of accustomed food from unknown changes in nature's ordinary course, forcing the herring farther and farther into deep water and resulting in more capricious dashes for the shore at spawning time.

Live in the Deep Water.

A recent German Commission to study the natural history of the Baltic, came to the conclusion that herring live in the deep water off the coast, which they approach periodically, swimming in separate schools and moving independently, and spawning at different localities at various seasons.

The herring is a migratory fish, and its movements are so complicated that much mystery still baffles the scientists, the abundance of the fish at former resorts varying from year to year. Within the last few years, vast schools have appeared on the south coast of Sweden after they had deserted that region for seventy years. Artificial fertilization of herring ova has been easily effected in hatcheries, but no wide spread efforts at propagation have ever been carried out, simply because it has never yet been demonstrated that the supply has anywhere continuously diminished. The natural fertility of productiveness has been sufficient to overcome the yearly increasing drain of the fisheries, and the still greater destruction due to the hordes of "big fish eating little fish," porpoises, sharks, dogfish, in fact nearly every species of larger fish, with even the gulls following the schools to prey upon them.

Although seasons may vary from causes beyond human control, the time is coming when the Nova Scotia fisherman, with improved methods and adequate government administration, will double, treble, or perchance quadruple the herring fishery on our coasts.

A word or two on methods, and the need of enlisting a larger degree of public interest in the self-denying occupation of the fisherman will be the subject of the next article.

How the Farmer Used to Buy Salt Herring

Old-time Custom Passing Away—Big Demand for Fish—Some Varieties Which are Scarce and Plentiful—Handling Salt and Pickled Fish—Haddie in Good Demand.

Montreal, Feb. 23.—Once upon a time the average grocer used to handle during the winter months large quantities of Labrador herrings. In fact he generally sold them by the barrel and especially to farmers who purchased the bulk lot knowing that the fish would keep in some cold outhouse as well as in the grocer's shop. But that custom has passed with many of the other pioneer ideas, and besides, Labrador herrings, to-day, are rather scarce.

But there is still the demand for fish; in fact it has greatly increased since grandfather's day and covers a greater number of varieties.

Frozen fish are now in good demand and are easily handled by dealers, thanks to the weather man. They are all fresh caught stock and once frozen should remain so until sold to the consumer to retain their best qualities. Haddock is one of the leading Atlantic fresh frozen fish. Codfish and steak cod also come under this heading as do also pike, mullets, etc.

Whitefish is very dainty and comes principally from the inland lakes. Halibut and salmon are for the most part from Pacific waters and are also obtained from eastern waters. Both these fish are delectable and are prominent as fresh frozen.

Salt and pickled fish are easily handled and are popular at this time of the year. Labrador herrings, mackerel, green cod, sea trout, etc., are the most important kinds. There is always a good demand but strange to say green cod are in small compass and herrings are scarce.

Many Profitable Lines.

Under prepared and smoked fish there are several lines that are real favorites. Prepared cod brings a heavy trade during Lent but just now it is reported rather scarce. Finnan haddies are also in heavy demand and supplies are pretty plentiful. Kippered herrings are included with the general list. Then there are fillets and bloaters and going over the whole list it is not difficult to find a number of good selling lines that would be handled easily and would prove profitable.

All of the fish mentioned are delectable and as they are slightly different in taste they will appeal differently to different people.

OFFICERS OF R. G. A.

Victoria, B.C., Feb. 23.—Satisfactory reports were presented at the annual meeting of the Victoria Retail Grocers' Exchange. E. J. Wall, the president, gave an address on the work of the first year. Officers were elected as follows: E. J. Wall, president; H. Schroder, vice-president; B. W. Hall, treasurer; F. C. Futcher, secretary; directors, A. Thornton, A. Tait, W. C. Paterson.

Trade Notes.

Angove & Stinson, Vernon, B.C., have purchased the dry goods and grocery lines of The Supply Company.

J. J. Friesore, general merchant, Laird, Sask., has sold to John P. Epp.

W. J. Lloyd has purchased the grocery store of F. W. Hughes, at Brandon, Man.

Union Trading Co., general merchants, Prince Albert, Sask., has been dissolved.

The biggest cargo of fish ever shipped to Boston in one vessel was recently sent to that port from Newfoundland. The ship had beneath her hatches and on her deck 235,000 pounds of codfish, 170 barrels of pickled herring and a quantity of turbot.

How Some Merchants Are Realizing on the Window Space

A careful observance of the stores in any town or city, demonstrates that merchants are beginning to fully appreciate the great importance of display in the increasing of sales. Foremost among those who have been so convinced are the grocers who are constantly on the look out for methods which may be of use to them in this line. New schemes to increase the power of display in windows, are constantly being thought out by merchants who desire their windows to present a pleasing and attractive appearance.

Many merchants have brackets set up in their window on which they may show goods other than those in the main part of the exhibit. A window was recently noticed where such a bracket extended all the way across the window, placed high enough as not to spoil the main display. On this shelf was arranged another tasteful array, adding considerably to the selling power of the window.

Another merchant had strung wires from the ceiling, which was attached to suspend a shelf of plate glass. On this goods were arranged. These shelves can be hung at different elevations, at various sections of the window, but they should always be in such a position as not to interfere with the regular display.

Still another merchant whose store stands back a short distance from the street, has a double window, lower and upper. This can be best arranged, of course, when the store is first built, but nearly any window could be so made if the merchant so wished. Generally speaking the second platform should be constructd about six or seven feet above the first, but it would have to be lower where the store front extends right to the street line. To be of value, both displays must be completely within easy vision.

Other windows are arranged with numerous shelves running around the back and sides. In this way the ordinary display can be made, and different classes of goods placed on each shelf. This increases the quantity of goods open to public view, and, as each different article is on a separate shelf, the display is not mixed up to any extent.

Some merchants have glass display cases at the front of their store sloping down below the window level in which to show goods. Wall cases are sometimes placed at the entrance to the store when that is possible and no doubt are valuable selling agents, displaying goods to all customers entering and leaving the store.

There are many different methods to improve display, all having their good and their bad points. The merchant knowing the great value of display in selling goods should make use of the helps which he considers the greater value in his case.

U. S. Board of Tea Experts Favor Abolition of Colored Tea Not Stated to be Such—Should a Grocer Blow Into a Paper Bag?—An Alleged Illegal Coffee Combine —Some Advice on the Candling of Eggs.

The Board of tea experts of the United States have recommended that colored teas, unless so stated, be shut out of that country after May 1st. The secretary of the treasury will likely approve the recommendation and the new standard will thereupon go into effect. Dealers in the United States are much divided in opinion as to the probable effects of the color standard, but agree that it will bring about a big change in importation, as large quantities of China and Japan greens are at present used in that country.

A Seattle paper condemns the custom of certain grocery salesmen who make a practice of inflating the bags with their breath before filling, as unsanitary. It claims that outside of the possibility of germ transmission, it gives the parcel a dropsical effect not appreciated by the contents.

The members of all the local "egg circles," in Peterboro County, Ont., have formed an organization to be known as the Peterboro Co-operative Poultry Association. All the eggs produced or controlled by the members will be marketed from the Peterboro centre. A modern crate fattening establishment will be built there, where fowl supplied by the farmers will be fattened, so as to be marketed as first class poultry.

Retail grocers have considerable trouble in the handling of eggs. No matter how hard he may try and no matter what price he may pay for them, a dealer will occasionally sell poor eggs and one poor egg in a dozen will cause considerable trouble with the customer. The retailer should be very particular in the buying of eggs and will find it better to buy them in small quantities rather than buy a lot for the sake of getting a better price. Eggs in order to be in best condition must also be kept in a proper manner. A dry cool place is the most desirable. Never place them in a damp place where the temperature is changeable. Grocers in the smaller towns of course purchase most of their eggs from the farmers. Now while these are as a rule fresh, occasionally the farmer will find a stray nest and in order to protect himself against this danger, it would be well for the grocer to candle them before offering them for sale. Any person with good eyesight can candle eggs Hold an egg against a suitable light, with other light excluded and if it is fresh it will appear unclouded but if it is old it will be dark colored. Of course the color of the shell has to be considered also and the candler, especially the beginner, must take his time if he wishes to do his work correctly.

Up to 1880, America imported all her oranges and lemons from Europe, Brazil or the West Indies. About 1890 California started into the production but for some years the shipments could be reckoned by the thousand carloads, while it is estimated that the present California crop will amount to about 48,000 cars.

A Denver woman, going home for the day, locked everything up well, and for the grocer's benefit wrote on a card:

"All out. Don't leave anything."

This she stuck on the front door. On her return home she found the house ransacked and all her choicest possessions gone. To the card on the door was added: "Thanks; we haven't left much."

Nature has solved the problem of distribution. It uses a multitude of agents to effect the distribution of its products.

Nature does not expect every seed to fall upon fallow ground and to take root. But, it achieves a profitable percentage upon its distribution. This is all that an advertiser has to do to reap a profitable harvest on his outlay.

ST. CATHARINES, - ONTARIO

If proof is required that The Canadian Grocer's suggestions in its market columns are acted upon, here it is:

E. H. Ruttan, a Wallaceburg, Ont., grocer, says: "I recently saved $75 by watching The Grocer's market reports. This money was saved on a purchase of canned tomatoes."

It is instances of this character which have made this paper the reliable trade barometer that it is recognized to be from the Atlantic to the Pacific. This explains why the best dealers in Canada know much about the goods advertised in The Grocer—they place so much reliance on what it says through its reading columns, as well as on what is said in its advertising columns, that they will risk their money by following the suggestions made.

What higher tribute can be paid to any paper than this?

Every live grocer is now selling Syrup. Syrup is seasonable and a good seller. Of all brands on sale there is ONE that makes for satisfaction and profit to dealer all the time.

"CROWN BRAND" CORN SYRUP

For table use, made from the finest selected white corn. A suggestion to your customers for a trial tin will make steady business. For sale by all jobbers in Canada.

EDWARDSBURG STARCH CO., LIMITED

The Best Proposition!

Looked at any way you please, no line of goods holds out the same inducements to the Grocer as

UPTON'S
Jams, Jellies and Marmalade

First, they are made from the finest fruits in the world---Canadian Fruits---selected by experts and preserved and bottled in an up-to-date, sanitary factory, which is a model of cleanliness. Second, the "Upton" line never 'sticks,' because our extensive consumer advertising has created a demand for these goods; and third, selling "Upton's" specialties invariably leaves a satisfaction and profit-margin behind that makes trading a pleasure.

Are you featuring "Upton's"? If not, fall in line with the 'wise' ones.

DOLLARS and CENTS

Versus

BRAINS and SENSE

A dollar safely banked is better than two dollars worth of doubtful merchandise in the store. The daily depreciation in goods of questionable character is a steady and startlingly heavy drain on your invested capital. After all it is not so much a question of Dollars and Cents as Brains and Sense, when you are stocking up, friend.

Quality is the pivot on which your wheel-of-fortune turns constantly. It lubricates business. Without it you will be as helpless as a rudderless ship. With the Brains and Sense that you possess, you'll certainly stock the two quality articles that we list below:—

Griffin & Skelley's Canned Fruits

Picked by skillful hands, chosen by ever-watchful eyes, packed in the Factory of Precision—the best that Dollars and Cents and Brains and Sense can offer particular folks.

Canned Asparagus, Apricots, Peaches, Pears, Cherries, Plums and other wanted table fruits. Qualify Goods!

Coco Fruitine or Vegetable Butter

An absolutely pure extract of the cocoanut. Superior to butter or lard or oil for cooking and doubly economical, because so very rich. Tasteful, healthful, nourishing.

New to you, perhaps, but not to England, where it enjoys enormous sales. "Quality Goods."

HERE THEY ARE

Do you want a card-index system ?
Do you want a loose-slip system ?
Do you want a system in which each customer's account is kept in a separate book—a duplicate book, numbered from 1 to 50—where the customer gets with each purchase a duplicate slip showing total amount he owes and which bears the same number as the original which you keep in the book for your record ?

Cut of 100 book size, showing hood locked to cabinet, when not in use.

Bear in mind no matter what kind of system you should have for your business we will supply it and it will be a fire-proof system in the bargain.

We have spent 20 years in manufacturing credit systems and that's why we say we know we have something that will save you time and money.

It will cost you nothing to find out.

Tell us what your business is and how many accounts you have and let us give you full information.

THE NAME "FAIRBANK" MEANS SOAP SURETY

GOLD DUST is sold before you stock it, because your customers know what it will do and every one of them has read our slogan,

"Let the Gold Dust Twins do your work"

GOLD DUST sells itself—you don't have to "talk it up," we DO THAT in our advertising and the thousands of women who USE it TALK FOR IT, too. You can sell a customer her GOLD DUST and six other articles in the time it would take to tell her about some other washing powder, and she'll always buy GOLD DUST and be pleased with it. Don't talk yourself into trouble by "pushing" powders that have no standing—just SELL GOLD DUST.

THE WANT AD.

The want ad. has grown from a little used force in business life, into one of the great necessities of the present day.

Business men nowadays turn to the "want ad" as a matter of course for a hundred small services.

The want ad. gets work for workers and workers for work.

It gets clerks for employers and finds employers for clerks. It brings together buyer and seller, and enables them to do business though they may be thousands of miles apart.

The "want ad." is the great force in the small affairs and incidents of daily life.

THIS LIGHT SAVES YOUR MONEY

MR. GROCER--Can you afford to lose $240 in 5 years? One Ontario grocer did this without knowing it. Using electricity his lighting bill was $64 per year. Last year he used an "R-K" Lighting System costing $16, saving $48, and in addition had a much better lighted store. We guarantee the system 5 years--an absolute guarantee that he will save at least $240.

Do you know you're losing money, let us help you save. The "R-K" System can be installed anywhere---gives a pure white brilliant light--costs less than gas, electricity or acetylene. Costs but little to install--saves your money from the start--thousands in daily use.

You need one in your store--let us tell you why. Write TO-DAY for booklet "M"--it's free--a postal brings it.

What's What in New York Sugar Market

An Alleged Shortage of Four Hundred Thousand Tons in Output of Cuban Cane the Reason Why Speculators Have Been Forcing Up Price of Staple — European Crop Hope of Refiners—Where Retailer Figures.

It can hardly be said of sugar that the world stands agape when it goes into a tantrum, and advances, in as many days, 20 or 30 points; still at the moment, a great deal of anxious attention in different parts of the world is directed towards the staple which is now extremely active on a rising market in New York.

It is a reported shortage of the sugar cane crop in Cuba that is causing the flurry. It is persistently stated this shortage will amount to thirty per cent. of the total output of the island, and that there will be no hope of any relief later on in the season. So much from the speculators.

The refiners are earnestly hoping, of course, that the reports of Cuban shortage are exaggerated, and are inclined to offer resistance to the demands of the speculators that are trying to send the price of raws sky-high. The manufacturers are also pinning their faith to the cane and beet crops of Europe, feeling sure there will be plenty in the old land to force down the market to what they call a reasonable level. In the meantime, it is difficult for anyone, no matter how well he may be posted, to say in advance just what the market is going to do during the next few weeks. At time of writing the speculators have a little the best of the argument. They have succeeded in keeping up the price of the raw product so far that the refiners have been forced to advance the price of the manufactured product ten points, and no one knows whether there is another one coming or not.

History of the Advance.

The history of the last flurry is interesting in the extreme, even though it be chronicled but as far back as January 24th last. On that day the enormous supplies in sight of cane and beet sugar sent the raw market scuttling down to 3.42 at New York. The proposition of the refiners in New York was to force the dealers to sell raw sugar as low as 3.33. There was not much done for a week, and both sides were inclined to wait further information.

It came. On February first the circular of Willet & Gray contained the intelligence that the crop of cane sugar in Cuba would be 200,000 tons short. It was like a bolt from the blue, even if there came with it an expression of the belief that the shortage in output was due to cold weather in the larger centrals, or grinding establishments, and also that a good deal of new machinery was being installed.

Would Come Out Later.

Speculators, as can well be imagined, were jubilant, but the unconvinced refiners held off in the hope that, as the report had stated, cold weather and the instalation of machinery was at the root of the matter and that the setback would be only of a temporary nature. The full output, they argued, would come along later, and were inclined to dismiss the matter there. But the speculators were quite obstinate on the point. They had been given a nibble of the advance and they wanted a whole, big bite. To them it was going to be a permanent shortage, and to back up their belief in that regard they shot up raw sugar from 3.42 to 3.63, and all in a few days. Far out on the outskirts of the throng of excited speculators in New York stood the refiners, pooh-poohing the whole situation, and declaring they would not think of taking raw sugar at any price above 3.48. Again for a day or two there was a period of waiting.

A Further Advance.

Direct to Europe, a few days later a report was flashed from Cuba, stating the belief that the cane crop of the island would be not only 200,000, but 400,000 tons short of the estimates. Supplied with fresh ammunition, the New York speculators renewed their campaign and advanced the raws to 3.67-8, where it rests at the moment of writing. No longer indifferent, the refiners began to take notice of the trend of affairs. Sales were effected at 3.67, and on the sympathy of that movement beet sugar in Europe also advanced from 9s ¾d to 9s 10½d. Later on, however, beet reacted. Still there were several buyers in New York who paid thousands more for their supplies than they had intended on the first of February.

The Estimated World Crop.

This agitation of sugar in New York over the Cuban situation seems difficult to understand to the outsider on an analysis of the estimates of the world crop. This year, Europe and America in cane and beet were expected to produce 17,024,000 tons, an increase of 2,143,818 tons over 1910. Of this, Cuba's expected output was but 1,900,000 tons, which would have been an increase of 99,651 tons over last year. But it is quite possible for the world's sugar market to be dominated at any one time by the situation at any one great centre. So it came about that when there was predicted for sugar, in place of a substantially increased output, a reduction in supplies of 400,000 tons, trouble hovered on the horizon in a moment.

The retailer is deeply concerned in such movements, for, just as in manufactures, the price of the raw product govern the selling price of the article, so the price of raw sugar dominates the price of the refined. Generally the refiners, and especially the Canadian, grade the price of their goods at a reasonable percentage above the cost of the raw material to allow a fair profit after the cost of refining and marketing has been met. If an unfair percentage was charged, it would be quite easy, say refiners, for foreign makers to sell their goods in this country and force down the price; so the Canadian sugar men cut the price of the refined product when the price of the raw product drops, and raise the selling price of their product when the cost of the raw material is raised against them. There you find the real reason why sugar when active fluctuates up and down the scale.

"The New York situation affords a good opportunity," said one wholesaler, "for the retailer to decide for himself whether that percentage of increase by the maker is fair to him. Since Feb. Ist, the price of raw product has gone up from 3.42 to 3.83, with a strong market.

"On January 1st this year, refined was quoted at $4.60 (Montreal). On Jan. 20th the price descended to $4.30, and on Feb. 2nd was still further reduced to $4.20. During the early part of February, while refiners in New York waited expectantly and anxiously for good reports, the 4.20 price held good. It was not until Feb. 24, or last Friday, that the price was advanced to $4.30 at Montreal. So you see that can hardly be declared unconsistent," he said.

A Battle Royal.

"As a matter of fact, towards the end of last week, refiners, being the purchasers, were using long distance glasses to discern in the position some glimmering ray of good report from Europe, and are doing their utmost to instil the fear of it into the minds of the speculator. It is a battle royal between the two interests. Nothing had come out to change the situation. Cuba's crop still seemed to be far behind and Europe was not sending out any cheering information. It resolved itself into a question of who could wait longest—the seller or the buyer.

"The situation had resolved itself into that. It was possible the reports of shortage in the output in Cuba were grossly exaggerated, and possible also that the expected crop would arrive later to the market. Also the refiner was urging, hopefully, and with vigor that when the river systems of Germany and Russia were opened for navigation, such a supply of both beet and cane sugar material would be exported to this continent that the speculator would be unable to hold up the price of the raws he had to sell.

"The manufacturers were also hoping that the weather would become more favorable in the plantation districts of Cuba, which would allow of better production, and go a long way toward bringing the crop of that island up to the early estimate.

"The speculator answered all this with a smile; it was his contention that the reports of the Cuban reduction came out only after careful consideration, and that, if Europe had any great quantity of exportable raw material, America would have been made aware of the fact long ere this.

"It will be a higher market," was his final opinion.

Should Realize on Johnny's Tooth

Some Reasons Why Sales of Sugar Have Increased During Past Few Years—How National Sweet Tooth is Being Cultivated—How Several Dealers Have Increased Sale—An Effective Sugar Window.

Although it would appear at first guance that sugar is one of those staples the sale of which cannot by any ingenuity be increased, that impression must go by the board just as soon as one comes to consider the number of sugar sales that go on every day of the year, in every community of any size in Canada.

There are ways and ways of selling sugar, and not all of them will work out to the same advantage. In the affairs of this world locality and environment are great factors. If it were otherwise in the case of this particular staple what would explain to satisfaction the selling of 20 pounds of sugar for a dollar by one dealer, while 18 only were given for that amount of money in a store but a little farther down the street.

Environment influences merchandising, and the dealer who would reap the greatest harvest of sales should cultivate the characteristics of the customers of his district.

But that is not all. While it has been declared by many successful merchants that environment was the foundation upon which they reared the structures of splendid businesses, they did not stop content when the peculiarities of their customers had been mastered. They built. They took those traits of their patrons, as the bed rock, as the root, and cultivated until the branches, the buds and the ripe fruit all came in turn to reward their patient husbandry.

Sugar is as essential to the grocer as wheat to the miller. He must carry it if he would continue in business. Like salt it is needed in almost everything the housewife prepares. Once, and not so long ago that many of the readers of The Grocer can remember, sugar was classified as a semi-luxury, and was carefully and guardedly served. Now it is no longer so. The sales of this staple have increased until the demand has become insistent. Why? Surely it is not altogether due to its gradual cheapening. In fact, is sugar not a little dearer than a few years ago? Can the increase not be traced to the tendency of a prosperous people to indulge, more and more, the craving for good things? Do not the children of this generation ask for, and get it, much oftener than those of the last? Surely they do. Housewives are recognizing its greater need and usefulness, and are pleased to extend its use. There was a time when one could count on the fingers of one hand, the number of women who purchased the staple in large quantities.

Suggestion for a Sugar Window Display Which Would Undoubtedly Sell More Sugar.

Have the grocers of Canada taken full advantage of this change in the national temperament? Have they been persistent in endeavoring to fan into a flame this increasing desire for sweets that is smoldering in all Canadians? Probably they have, in some localities, but it would seem from the few window displays distinctively "sugar" to be seen now-a-days, that the effort has not been general. There still remains ample opportunity for dealers with good following to press forward educative campaigns in sugar with excellent results to themselves. It can never do harm to convince any community of the need of more liberal purchasing in any one line, and admittedly the same rule would apply in the case of sugar. With its wider sale there would come a more liberal use in the households, of all the preparations that call, in the first instance for sugar, being not complete in themselves.

But in doing this it is not always necessary to resort to a price-cutting war. No merchant in one district need be afraid of a competitor in another who sells a pound or two more to the dollar than he does. In fact, the lower price provides to the other dealer a splendid opportunity to talk quality and service for which people will pay liberally now-a-days. Price-cutting has no secure place in the scheme of economics. It should be resorted to only when the stock shows evidence of depreciation, which is, often in itself but an example of poor buying on the part of the dealer. When price-cutting is done, and especially in sugar, those who do it place upon the method the stamp of inconsistency when they lay at the door of the other fellow the responsibility for the move. It need not be done, any more than in salt or flour, and yet these sell fairly well.

Mr. Grocer, sugar is going to be used more and more in Canada. The demand for it is going to outstrip the increase in population. Then SELL it, but sell it in a dignified manner. Don't take recourse to lowering prices to a point where profits are insignificant, but bring to bear upon its sale, the selling qualities with which you are endowed. Then YOU sell sugar; YOU derive the greatest benefit from its sale. Convict your customers of the crime of not buying enough and leave the rest to human nature. The results will come.

One Indifferent Grocer.

A grocer questioned recently as to the methods he employed to increase the sale of sugar, replied: "Oh, I never try to increase the sale of sugar. Why, the people know we keep it, and if they want it, they will ask for it."

This grocer is not taking full advantage of his opportunities. The sale of sugar, like any other line, can be widened by proper methods. Take even potatoes. Customers know that grocers keep potatoes, but who would say that a display of nice clean potatoes in a prominent part of a store, with a price card attached, would not increase the sales in that line?

Surely it would, and the same is true of sugar. The grocer who pushes it will undoubtedly sell the most, while the grocer who leaves it in the barrel and waits for customers to ask for it, will find his sales falling off. So the first step towards adding to sales lies in constantly keeping this item before the customer, that she will keep a supply on hand. A customer will use more when she has a large supply. If she happens to go a day without it, so much the less is the consumption of this line.

Generally speaking, it is easier to sell sugar, or any other line, when the price has been cut. Anyone can sell an article at cost, but it takes the real salesman to sell an article at a profit. The good merchant will aim to sell at a fair profit, and find some method of doing it.

Sought a Fair Average Profit.

One grocer, speaking in reference to the matter, said: "I try to sell sugar at a fair average profit, knowing that as sales are large, I can sell at a little less profit than fancy groceries. I do not resort to price cutting, but try, rather, to sell at regular prices, and trust to proper methods to keep sales up. I sell nothing but the very best cane and beet sugar, while many grocers around me are selling a cheaper sugar. I emphasize this fact to customers in both my advertising and talks to them. I have their confidence, and they know they can depend on me to give them only the best, and therefore trade keeps coming my way in this line.

"Recently I tried to increase my sugar sales and to do so without putting prices any lower than usual. In my advertising I pointed out to my customers that they could depend on me to give them only the best sugar. In one part of my store I made a display of sugar in a glass case with a show card bearing the words 'Did you order sugar? We carry only the best.' In another part of the store I had a similar display, with a card reading: 'Our sugar makes excellent dainties—order some?' Over the door, in full view of outgoing customers, I placed the sign, 'Did you order sugar?' I instructed my clerks and order takers to bring sugar before customers in making sales, and as a result of these combined methods, I found a wonderful increase in sugar sales without cutting prices in the least."

Sell All You Can.

Another dealer said: "Now sugar does not pay as large a profit as other articles in the grocery trade, but that is no reason for allowing your competitors to have all the trade in that line. Whatever you sell, sell as much as you can, and if the individual profit is small, the total profit will be larger than if you shirk selling that line of goods and allow customers to purchase it at other stores. Customers generally purchase other goods where they buy sugar, and therefore you should try to get their trade in this line on account of the extra business it attracts."

A big merchant described a sugar window he used recently, which, although simple, was quite effective, he claims, in making sales.

"At the front of the window," said he, "on a blue paper loaf sugar was spread, out of which was picked the words: 'Best sugar only.' Behind this in the centre was a barrel on its side with sugar sloping out of its mouth and on to the clean window floor. On either side of the barrel were three bags shocked together, on each of which was a sugar stamp or crest.

"In the foreground were displayed several dollars' worth of sugar, nicely bagged and securely tied, signifying it could be carried in safety for any distance, no matter what jolting it might be subjected to. And at the back of the window, overlooking the whole display was suspended a big show card." The inscription was that shown in the accompanying display suggestion.

The Trend of Sugar Prices.

As sugar has turned upward again in price, it may be interesting to review the market changes for the past two years. To judge the fluctuations of sugar is a difficult matter, but by closely following raw and refined markets, considering the influence of supply and demand, the danger of being "caught" can be guarded against to a certain extent. But, even those with years of experience, find themselves at sea at certain times, and rules which generally govern the market do not seem to apply. Last year those who purchased at the beginning of the year saved money, as sugar did not drop below the January price until the first of December. However, the year before, sugar advanced 10 cents in February and dropped back 10 cents in March. This year during January and February sugar dropped to a low point, a point, in fact, as low as it has been for six years. It now seems as if the reaction had set in.

The changes in sugar during the past two years on a Montreal basis are:—

Jan. 1	$4.35	Jan. 7	$4.70
Feb. 5	4.45	Jan. 21	4.80
Mar. 5	4.35	Feb. 25	4.95
Mar. 12	4.45	Mar. 4	5.05
Mar. 19	4.55	May 27	5.15
Mar. 26	4.65	Aug. 5	5.05
May 7	4.55	Oct. 7	4.95
July 30	4.60	Oct. 14	4.85
Sept. 10	4.70	Oct. 28	4.70
Oct. 15	4.60	Dec. 2	4.60
Nov. 19	4.70

Jan. 1	$4.60
Jan. 13	4.40
Jan. 20	4.30
Feb. 2	4.20
Feb. 25	4.30
Mar. 3	4.40

At present, after the recent rise in price of 10 cents, sugar is 65 cents per cwt. cheaper than one year ago, and the average price for the year will possibly be lower than last year.

Ask Amendment to the Adulteration Act

Montreal Men Instituting Campaign for Government Protection of Pure Maple Sugars and Syrups Against the Offerings of Adulterated Goods in Canadian Market—Will Petition the Hon. Sydney Fisher—Where Dealer is Interested.

Montreal, March 2.—With the intention of asking the Dominion Government to establish beyond question the status of alleged adulterated maple sugars, and maple syrups, in the markets of this country, several local men have inaugurated a vigorous campaign.

Most active in the movement is John H. Grimm, of this city. He has prepared a booklet, setting forth the reasons why the Canadian manufacturer making pure products, should be protected against the competition of makers whose products are alleged to be "doctored." Mr. Grimm is also causing to be circulated a petition asking the Hon. Sydney Fisher, Minister of Agriculture, at Ottawa, to amend the adulteration act.

With the outcome of this movement all dealers are interested. They ask and they think they are entitled to know just what every brand of manufactured sugar and syrup stands for. They should be truly told, they claim, when they buy the product of any maker, just what they are buying, so that they will not misrepresent when they turn it over to a customer. The grocer should know just how pure, or impure, is every article that is offered to him for sale, which he in turn must offer to his customers. And no good dealer wants to sell an impure, when a pure article is called for.

The petition which will be forwarded to the Minister of Agriculture is worded as follows :—

"TO THE HONORABLE SYDNEY FISHER, B.A., Minister of Agriculture,
Ottawa, Canada.

"We, the undersigned PURE MAPLE SYRUP and PURE MAPLE SUGAR manufacturers, of the Dominion of Canada, do respectfully beg to petition the Government of Canada, and particularly you, as Minister of Agriculture, to so amend the Adulteration Act as to give us greater protection against having our pure maple products sold throughout Canada in open competition with adulterated syrups and sugars.

"We wish to express to you our greatest appreciation of the keen interest you take in all matters pertaining to Agriculture. We appreciate what you have done for the Maple Sugar Industry in the way of publishing Bulletins, and using your influence with the Minister of Inland Revenue to have an analysis of maple products made each year. The combined actions of these two Departments of the Government Service has greatly stimulated the production of pure maple syrup and pure maple sugar.

"While these two Departments have been active towards assisting the manufacturers of maple products, the adulterators have at the same time been active in trying to work out some system of adulteration whereby, by the careful blending of foreign sugars or foreign sugars and maple products, it has been somewhat difficult for the analytical chemists to determine just what should be classed "adulterated" and just what should be classed as "pure." This action on the part of the adulterators is causing the pure maple syrup and pure maple sugar manufacturers great annoyance, and it is with this idea in view that we are hereby petitioning you to amend the above named act.

"You have, by legislation, assisted the butter and cheese industry of Canada ; you have, by an act of Parliament, prohibited the manufacture and sale of olemargarine, butterine, and spurious butter ; you have, by the Fruit Marks Act, given protection to the honest fruit packer, and by the Seed Control Act, made it illegal to sell bad seeds. We, therefore, do not consider our request unreasonable, and would humbly pray you to grant our petition, and so amend the Adulteration Act by making it illegal to have the word "Maple" or any of its derivatives appear on the labels of any packages of maple syrup or maple sugar unless the same be guaranteed absolutely pure, and not a mixture containing compounds of foreign sugars."

Retail Merchants in Session at Guelph

Proceedings of The Opening Day—Committees Struck Off to Consider the Various Questions — Treasurer's Report Shows Balance—Entire Report to Appear in Next Week's Issue.

Guelph, Ont., March 2.—Owing largely to the unfavorable weather, which in turn cut down the attendance of the delegates, there was little opportunity for the Ontario Provincial Branch of the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada to get down to association business when their twelfth annual convention opened here on Tuesday afternoon.

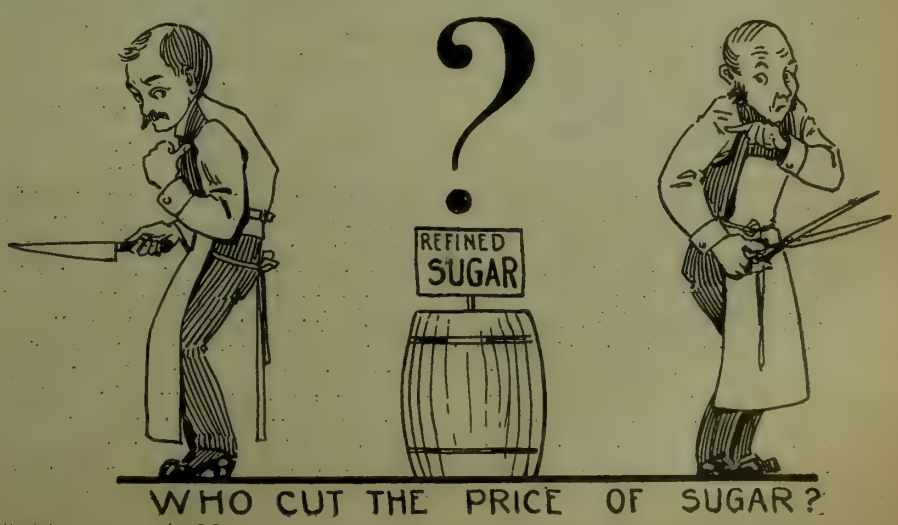
Accordingly only preliminary work was proceeded with. The address of welcome, which was to have been tendered the delegates by His Worship the Mayor of Guelph, on Tuesday afternoon, was postponed on suggestion of President C. W. Kelly, until the opening session on Wednesday morning, when it was expected that the full roster of delegates would be on hand.

On motion of the Dominion President, B. W. Ziemann, of Preston, Ont., President Kelly selected a striking committee to allot the places on all the other committees to report on association work during the convention. This striking committee comprised B. W. Ziemann, merchant tailor, Preston ; R. W. Dockeray, dairyman, Toronto ; B. McDonald, grocer, Picton ; H. Occomore, hardware, Guelph, and E. M. Trowern, R.M.A. secretary.

The appointments by this committee were as follows :

Committee A—To receive reports on required Provincial legislation and report thereon : C. W. Kelly, Guelph ; N. B. Cobbledick, undertaker, Toronto, and B. McDonald, Picton.

Committee B—To receive reports on required Dominion legislation and report thereon : B. W. Ziemann, Preston ; M. Moyer, Toronto, and J. D. Wisdom, Barrie.



Committee C—To receive reports on subjects that affect general retail interests and report thereon : George Cooper, Toronto ; E. A. Hales, Guelph; E. A. Mathews, and J. Empey.

Committee D—To receive reports on subjects of interest to any section and which require the endorsation of the convention : C. Van Camp, Toronto ; J. F. Holloway and D. Kelly.

Committee E—To receive and consider amendments to the by-laws and constitution : R. W. Dockeray, E. M. Trowern, George C. Gibbard, of Toronto ; and H. Occomore, of Guelph.

When these committees were struck, it was arranged that their numbers could be added to as fresh delegates arrived, and the need felt. To them was given some twenty-three resolutions, for consideration. They covered almost all branches of retail endeavor, but the need of better system of account-collecting, and the menace of the mail order house, were particularly prominent amongst them.

The entire report of the convention will be published in next week's issue of The Grocer.

Reasons Why Successful Men Succeed

Brief Historical Sketch of the Career of One Man Who Came From the Old Country and Succeeded—Started at Small Salary With Big Firm and Worked —Co-operated With Men Under Him—The Result.

By Henry Johnson, Jr.

"Friend Johnson:—Perhaps it would not be out of place to give a brief narrative of my progress in the grocery business since I arrived in this country.

"I have often heard it said by comparatively successful men that a man's success in life may in many cases be attributed to influence and luck. Influence is all right, in fact, necessary, in politics; but influence never yet made a successful grocer.

"I arrived here just five years ago this month and came directly to this city with absolutely nothing to recommend me save a few old-country recommendations and a fair knowledge of the business as it is done over there.

Started With Big Firm.

"I was determined at the outset to get connected, if possible, with a large firm, for I felt that in time a man's efforts would receive some recognition. I started at a very small salary with my present firm, then and now considered the largest grocers in this State.

"I worked for nearly two years, hard, constant, and ever anxious to advance the interest of my employers. I made it a point to get to work always before seven, never one minute after, and never more than the specified time to meals and, at closing time, I did not break my neck trying to get out of the place, but remained at my post until eevrything was in good shape. I devoted every minute of the day to work. When there was nothing to be done—and it seldom happens that a grocer can say 'there's nothing to do'—I found many useful jobs and kept right at it, with the result that at the expiration of two years I was placed in charge of a business, then doing $65,000 yearly. The same spirit of perseverance was infused into my new occupation and, in a short time, I succeeded in increasing our sales by over $100 weekly. They have since rapidly increased until now I control a business of $104,000 yearly, thus showing a total increase of $39,000 per annum in three years, in a district where conditions remain in about the same state.

Reduced Work to System.

"My predecessor, a man of long American experience and a man of ability in some respects, was unable to increase the same business; in fact, it had been stationary for two years.

"Now, I simply organized a system of my own, ignoring the existing one altogether. I impressed upon my men the fact that they were here for business and each and every one of them partners in the concern. That it would eventually benefit them, as well as the proprietors, to deeply interest themselves in their work. I pointed out that, in a cash business, the public expect more attention than they usually receive in a credit store. That they must be accurate, honest and just, always obliging and courteous. Above all, never to make a promise unless the way was clear to keep it; and to remember that 'a pleased customer is the best advertisement.'

Recognized Good Work by Men.

"I rearranged our routes, removed all obstructions, and gave every man a chance to work; and, when I saw a man doing his best and producing satisfactory results, I recognized him accordingly. This is an item men sometimes overlook. A man who interests himself in work does so with an object; and if he finds that his best efforts are ignored it usually happens that he becomes careless and indifferent. I belive in treating a man right in the same manner as that in which I should like to be treated myself. After that, the whole success of any enterprise depends not entirely upon the manager, but in a great measure upon the men under him.

"I have no favorites; that is, there is not a man who may be said to have 'a pull,' and therefore think that he is exempt from any particular class of work. This is a failing commonly observable in big establishments that employ a large number of men, and there is nothing, in my opinion, so detrimental to business as this. It should not be tolerated by any concern.

"We are still doing an increasing business; in fact, we believe ourselves capable of achieving any success—'impossible' cannot be found in our vocabulary. We do not hesitate to say that we shall be able to anounce still better results next year.

"It might probably interest you, as I consider you a man of sound judgment, and practical in matters relating to the grocery business, or perhaps it might interest some of your readers, to know that my total expenses for running a business of dimensions referred to footed up exactly 9½ per cent. of gross sales, and I flatter myself by assuming that such is a satisfactory showing.

"Sincerely yours,
"Subscriber."

My friend says that "influence never yet made a successful grocer." He omits to say that the only kind of luck which amounts to anything has a "p" prefixed to it; but he proves the saying, nevertheless. Look at his way of going to work—simple and direct, same as his account of himself. He cuts out all talk; gets right to the point. From this I should judge he would be a good advertiser, and I hope he will send me some of his "stuff" some of these days, so I may look it over. His mind was made up to pitch in and better himself. On the way over, putting two and two together, he concluded, as he says, to get in with a big concern, and for reasons so plainly stated.

Filled in Idle Moments.

And now look—just LOOK—at the next paragraph! See the few lines taken up and note what those words tell. Talk about your "sermons in stones"—why there is nearly a life's growth outlined in those few words. First to get the start; to get the RIGHT start, at any kind of wages—pay did not matter at that stage of the game, for this man was working for his own great future. Next, having got the start, what to do with it Work! Work! WORK! That's the secret: "Hard, constant, ever anxious to advance the interests of my employers." Promptness—"a little before, but never after"—that went without a thought with this man. Filling in the idle moments—rather the moments which, with the average man, would have been idle ones, but which, to the man anxious to get on, were laden with golden opportunity—why there's inspiration in every word and line! And then to sweep onward and upward, in a single sentence to the "result that, at the end of two years" he was put in charge of a business which the same kind of work on his part increased by over 60 per cent. at the end of three years. Let the young man read. Let the clerk who finds himself tempted aside by little "diversions" and a yearning to be free from work on the sound of the whistle, read, ponder and digest.

No Royal Road.

Results count; and any time you think you're just about the correct model, stop and figure up results. Put yourself in your employer's place, try to figure results from his standpoint, and ask yourself, in all candor, whether you, being employer, would trust yourself alone, being employe, with the business in which you are presently employed for two weeks. After you have honestly and truthfully replied to that question, then you may be able to determine just why you are not yet getting double your original salary after working, maybe, for several years.

RUBBER DISPLACING TEA.

That in 1912 there will be a shortage of 35,000,000 lbs. in the production of tea in the low tea growing districts of Ceylon, is the information sent to Canada by a tea expert who has just covered the district above referred to. The cause of this, he reports, is due to the interplanting of rubber which took place within the past four years, the effect of which will be felt in 1912.

THE GROCER'S MARKETS.

It is not often that The Canadian Grocer gives way to self-congratulation, but we feel justified in doing so on this question of sugar.

Those who read at all carefully the issue of last week will have noticed that the point was made there that sugar would in all probability advance. That advance—ten points—came on the day after that issue of The Grocer was off the press.

The point made is that it is generally to the advantage of our readers to scan The Grocer market reports carefully. There are suggestions there from time to time which often mean a saving of money to those who act quickly, just as has been noted in sugar.

SELL CONDENSED MILK.

An act respecting the production and sale, in Ontario, of milk for human consumption, has been introduced into the Provincial Legislature at Toronto.

Fathered by Hon. Jas. Duff, this legislation is known as The Ontario Milk Act, and is designed to give to the council of every municipality in the province authority to pass by-laws regulating the milk on sale, even to the point of production.

The cry for pure milk that has gone up from nearly every centre in the Province, has no doubt been largely responsible for this bill. Milk is one of the few articles of domestic consumption essential to the well-being of the nation, and the difficulty experienced by the dealers in getting it to the consumer in perfect condition is admittedly great.

It is this general doubt of the purity of bulk and even bottled milk that accounts for the steady sale of condensed milk. Many reputable firms throughout the country are putting these products on the market. Prepared in establishments where cleanliness is truly considered as next to Godliness, these canned brands of milk are so sealed up as to keep for an indefinite length of time in any climate when reasonable precautions are taken.

Grocers would do well to ponder deeply over these things, for they are selling points that would be valuable in the building up of a trade in milk and cream that can be stocked upon their shelves.

HEARING THE TRAVELER.

Cases are occasionally coming to light where traveling men, calling upon the retail grocery trade, have been subjected to treatment unusual and unfair.

The Canadian Grocer believes that every reputable representative of every reputable house is entitled to at least a civil hearing. And we also believe that the great majority of our readers, in the trade, do give the man from the wholesale and manufacturing house every opportunity to explain his lines, without treating him in the least discourteously. But there still are a few grocers who seem to consider it necessary to inflict some sort of hardship upon the knight of the grip. Not always does he deserve it.

This should not be. No one has any time to waste and such incidents can surely only be credited to the "loss" side of the ledger. A traveler has the right to-day to go to any retailer with his goods. If the dealer does not want them, well and good; let him say so. There need enter into the transaction only the exercise of a little common sense on the part of the traveler and a little patience on the part of the man he is trying to sell. Most, of the little things that breed discourtesy, practically all of them, flee away before the application of just a little judgment.

But still we do not charge all the fault to the retailer. There are travelers who are not entitled to much consideration,—men who lower their calling to the level of the street peddler. But such a man is generally an idler, and a waster. He is entitled to but little of the merchant's time, but that little should be accorded him pleasantly.

There are more ways of killing a goose than choking it to death with butter. Probably a method of dealing effectively with the unsatisfactory traveling man may occur some day to the unoffending retailer. But let us insist that every reputable representative of every reputable house be entitled to a fair and patient hearing.

DEVOTION TO DUTY.

Devotion to Duty.—What exploits, wonderful and inspiring, performed in its name, have been handed down to us by the chroniclers of history.

For Duty's sake, soldiers and sailors cheerfully have given their lives in time of war; locomotive engineers have stood by the throttle in time of wreck; workmen have risked their safety to avert disaster.

It is a far cry from the soldier on the battlefield to the young man in his place behind the counter of the grocery store, but the moral is that even in his humble sphere, the grocer's clerk can do much for his own advancement and the development of his employer's business, if he will, when the time comes, but sacrifice a little in the way of duty.

The Press takes up and glorifies the men who risk their lives that others may be spared. There is no one, apparently, that cares much whether the grocery clerk lives or dies. But his employer is watching and really anxious to be pleased with him. HE appreciates the boy who gives up some playtime now and again in the interests of the business; and rest assured, YOU, who are doing so, that the employer is taking note, and that he is contemplating, even while you think he is most unappreciative, making your devotino to duty worth while.

SALESMANSHIP COMPETITION.

The Canadian Grocer's competition on constructive salesmanship promises to be one of the most valuable features this paper has ever instituted. Already dealers and clerks in practically every province in Canada have written for particulars with the intention of entering this competition so that the medals will be keenly contested.

If there are any others who are desirous of entering there should be as little delay as possible in writing for particulars. The contest closes on May 1 and the results will appear in the spring number of The Grocer.

EDITOR'S CHAT.

A new departure is made in this issue of The Grocer. In this, and the issues to follow, during the next few weeks, there will be found one feature which will be concentrated upon.

This week it is sugar. This staple, for the reason that it is being buffetted about on the New York market at the moment, is a source of considerable worry to many of our readers, and because of that, care has been taken to supply the cause for this sudden change in price.

Also, in connection with that article, there is another dealing with the sale of sugar. Reasons are supplied why this staple should have an ever widening zone of sale, and some ideas are given that may help you, Mr. Grocer, to participate in that selling. Look for the future articles.

Next week the proceedings of the Ontario Retail Merchants' Association convention at Guelph will be given as fully as possible in The Grocer.

The Markets – 20c. Advance in Sugar

The Demand Has Been Extra Brisk—Dealers Uncertain as to the Next Move in Market—Raws are Firmer—It is Reported That Cuban Crop Will Not be as Short as Reported—General Scarcity of Evaporated Apples — Montreal Reports Them Unobtainable.

POINTERS:—

Sugar.—Advanced 10 cents.

Bordeaux Wines.—Up 10 cents a gal.

Evaporated Apples.—Unobtainable.

Ceylon Teas.—Price Advanced.

Molasses.—Higher in Primary Market.

Montreal, Mar. 2.—Sugar has apparently returned to its own. Last Friday's advance has been followed by a good demand and a generally wholesome trade and in addition the opinion prevails among certain members of the trade that another upward price movement is not a long way in the future. However, it is next to impossible to foretell the next step, and the majority of the trade are noticeably silent upon the question of the future. It has been stated that the primary market conditions hardly warranted all the declines that were the feature of the markets a short time ago, but this is hardly likely to meet with general approval. Bearish influences were manifest at the time.

In the primary molasses market the situation is firmer. To those grocers who handle wines it may be of interest to know that Bordeaux wines are up 10 cents a gal., and in the primary market are up 20 cents a gal. The price is soaring on account of the short crop of grapes.

Sugar.—An advance of ten cents was quoted in sugar on Friday last, and the market continues to hold a firm position. Wholesalers state that they look forward to another advance, and that the feeling is one of strength. It is now felt that the low prices that prevailed were not altogether warranted, that is, in the primary market. Just now the demand is good and is likely to continue so.

Syrups and Molasses.—In the primary market, molasses is reported much firmer. This is practically what was expected. The demand is improving here, and a fair business is reported. Syrup is in heavy demand; orders are coming in from all parts of the country. Of course, Lent is responsible to a certain extent for the improved demand.

Dried Fruits.—Demand is good considering all the conditions. Prunes are limited in supply and evaporated apples are decidely scarce. Some of the houses report that they can not secure supplies and those who are fortunate in holding a certain stock can afford to sit back and let prices soar a little higher. All that The Grocer said early in the season predicting high prices for evaps seems to be coming true and a few more moons will have to wax and wane before there is any thought of relief.

SUGAR UP A SECOND TIME.

Refined sugar advanced another 10 cents late in the middle of the week, making the total advance 20 cents since last issue. The quotations appearing on our market pages should be read 10 cents higher all round, as only the changes representing the first advance of 10 cents have been made there. This brings No. 1 refined cane sugar on Montreal basis up to $4.40, and $4.50 on Toronto basis.

Rice and Tapioca.—Since the recent advance in the price of rice the demand has been much improved and a good trade has been recorded. It is expected that the demand during Lent will be heavier than usual, and already signs have been evident that indicate a good trade during March. The market continues strong and the price is likely to be maintained at its present figure for some time.

Tea. — The tea market is decidely strong, and this new strength is shown especially in Ceylon, which for various reasons are high. The demand from Russia, Australia and South Africa for Ceylon tea has increased very rapidly in addition to heavy enquiries from other countries which have been good purchasers. Ceylons are quoted somewhat higher, and are now bringing a good price. There is not much change in the Japan market, conditions being practically identical with those existing a week ago.

CANNED GOODS

MONTREAL.—There has been no special feature to this market. Trade is confined to the same channels as last week. The present season now opened should bring new business to the observant grocer who is wise enough to take advantage of opportunities to dispose of his canned goods stock. Lent should bring new business in all lines of canned goods and especially in canned fish. The market is firm but rather featureless.

TORONTO.—The scarcity of stocks of canned vegetables is shown by the fact that dealers are buying amongst themselves in order to replenish their stocks. Even the supply of corn, which some thought would make up for the shortness in tomatoes and peas, is steadily growing smaller in volume. Trade is not showing any great activity at the present as wholesalers are not trying to push this line to any great extent, and retailers are evidently buying on a hand to mouth basis, as their needs require.

ONTARIO MARKETS

POINTERS—
Sugar—10c. advance.
Evaporated Apples—Firm.
Coffee—Some lines advance.
Beans—Best quality firm.
Canned Vegetables — Stocks getting low.

Toronto, Mar. 2.—The price of sugar was advanced ten cents per cwt. on Friday last following the trend of the raw market. At present it is in a peculiar condition with dealers uncertain as to its next move. Although the raw market is stronger which should indicate strength in refined still there are conditions which make some dealers believe that the price may not go up in that direction. It is reported that the Cuban crop will not be short, at least not as much as reported some time ago. If such is the case, and the Cuban crop is as large as at first estimated, it will likely mean cheaper raws, with an effect on refined prices.

The grocery market in general shows a great deal of strength, extending over a number of lines and including such items as tea, coffee, canned tomatoes, peas and corn, evaporated apples, peaches, and apricots, prunes, currants and beans. Of course these lines have all shown strength and in some cases advances for some time back, but the idea wished to be conveyed is that there has been no recession from their firm position.

The price of Maricaibo, Gautemalo and Jamaica coffee has been advanced by some houses. This is not due to any new strength in the primary situation, but because in the general advance these lines did not go up in accordance with primary market prices.

Trade does not show any great improvement except for the increased amount of business brought about by the big demand for sugar during the past week.

Sugar.—The price of sugar advanced 10 cents per cwt. on Friday last, bringing quotations in Toronto up to $4.40. At present the sugar market is in a peculiar and uncertain condition. While raws in New York are firmer, as high as 3.83 being paid, which should give strength to refined, there is a report that the Cuban crop will not be as short as reported a short time ago, and it is even suggested that it will come up to the original estimate; and if such proves the case, a reaction would not be a surprise. However, the position of the market just now is an exceedingly difficult one. Europe after declining fractionally remains firm at 9s. 8d. for March which is equal to 4.03 duty paid New York. Sales of Cuba and Porto Rico in New York at the closing of last week amounted to as much as 350,000 bags to refiners, while there were also reported sales of 50,000 bags to speculators at 3.79. All United States refined advanced 10 cents last week, except Federal who are shading the price 5 points. The demand for Canadian refined is at present extremely brisk.

Dried Fruits.—There are few lines of dried fruits that do not show firmness, due to the general scarcity of stocks at a season when the largest trade is about to commence. Retailers have little choice of sizes in prunes because wholesalers' stocks are so low that in most cases they have only a couple of different sizes to offer. Currants is an item that is showing considerable strength at the present time.

Tea.—Tea shows no recession from its strong position, and the opinion prevails that purchasers cannot see their purchases become dear while there is every probability of their stocks largely increasing in value. The biggest advance has taken place in common tea while its quality shows a falling off. Although medium teas have shared in the general increase in values, still this grade shows the smallest advance of any.

Coffee.—Some houses have advanced the price of Maricaibo, Gautemalo and Jamaica coffee of late. While the position of primary coffee is unchanged at the present, this advance of 2 cents per pound on these lines comes from the fact that when the general market took a rise that these lines did not go up in accordance with primary market, but now with stocks getting lower and new purchases to be made, prices have had to be advanced. One dealer in speaking of the effect the rise in coffee values has had on trade said that he was selling more of the higher grades than ever before, retailers having evidently turned to this line as they have not advanced as much in price as the lower grades. Trade on the whole seems to be fairly well maintained.

Spices.—Trade in spices is reported a little quieter just now than for some time past, but naturally this is a quiet season of the year in this line. Cloves are firmer in the primary market as are also peppers, especially blacks, but prices here remain unchanged. The primary market in gingers is easier, due to the prospective good crop in Africa.

Rice and Tapioca.—The rise of 10 cents in rice last week must have brought this line more prominently before the retailer as some wholesalers report a larger sale in rice than for some time, principally confined to the lower grades. Tapioca and sago are extremely quiet.

MANITOBA MARKETS

POINTERS:—
Sugar—Advanced.
Syrup.—Steady.
Dried Fruits.—Scarce and firmer.
Tapioca and Sago.—Advancing.

Winnipeg, Mar. 2.—With the continued mild weather over the greater part of the West, traffic is once more running regularly and orders continue to arrive from all points. The heavy rush which was so noticeable last week, slackened off somewhat this week, and it would almost appear as if the steady spring trade had not opened up yet for all firms. General trade conditions are, however, decidely more encouraging than they were a month ago.

Sugar during the week employed some tactics which surprised even the oldest heads in the business. British Columbia granulated sugar, owing to small stocks and large demand, advanced 10 cents higher for orders out of Winnipeg than anywhere else. A general advance in raw and refined sugars took place and indications are that a further advance will be forthcoming.

Sugar.—A general advance of 10 cents has taken place on the sugar market during the week. Owing to the recent strength of the raw sugar market, this advance was expected. The advance of an extra 10 cents on British Columbia granulated in barrels and sacks, on orders going out of Winnipeg, was unexpected, but increased demand and light stocks were the cause.

Dried Fruits.—The market continues to advance for certain lines of dried fruits. Representatives of one of the largest prune houses in California, who was in the city last week, and who has been traveling through the West, stated that no new stocks of prunes would be forthcoming for six months, while in the meantime, stocks were large enough to supply the demand, which would continue steady, thus preventing any rapid advance.

Dates, on the other hand, have declined ¾ cent per pound in bulk and ¼ cent per pound in packages.

Syrup and Molasses.—There is no change in these commodities. Trade continues active and prices unchanged. United States syrup is being offered at low figures by some houses.

Coffee.—A difference of opinion prevails regarding the course which will be followed in a few weeks; many wholesalers only reply "nothing new."

Coffee, standard Rio	0 14½	Coffee, choice	0 15
		Coffee, extra choice	0 16

Beans and Peas.—So far no change has taken place yet in the price of beans on the local market, the large dealers prefer to wait and watch the course of the reciprocity agreement for a while yet. The market is, however, strong for both.

Prices quoted now are:

Beans, 3-lb. picker, per bushel	2 15
Hand picked, per bushel	2 25
Peas, split, 100 lbs.	2 85

Tapioca and Sago.—No advances have taken place yet in these lines, although the market is decidely strong, and trade active. Barley, both pearl and pot, have advanced 5 cents per sack, and higher prices are predicted for the whole four mentioned.

Pearl tapioca, per lb	0 06½	0 06½
Sago, per lb	0 04½	0 05½
Pearl barley, 98 lb sack	....	3 55
Pot barley, 98 lb. sack	....	2 55

Cream of Tartar.—A slight increase of about 2 cents per pound has taken place during the week, a steady demand is in existence. Pails, 25 lbs., are now quoted at 31½ cents per lb.

BRITISH COLUMBIA MARKETS.

Vancouver, March 2.—Good potatoes are scarce, although there is a fair supply of medium quality. Some of the commission men and wholesalers have been in communication with Seattle, but white potatoes cost $28 there; landed here the price will be $39. This would bring the quotation high to dealers. The duty will make a difference of between $6 and $7 a ton in potatoes, so if the reciprocal trade arrangement goes through, it is said the potato market in British Columbia will be taken advantage of by the United States.

The first pineapples have arrived from Honolulu this season, and are of good quality.

Green vegetables are being received from Burnbay, which is just outside Vancouver, and from Victoria. Early rhubarb generally comes in first from California, but with conditions as they are now, the Canadian has a chance in the market.

NEW BRUNSWICK MARKETS.

St. John, Mar. 2.—There was a reaction in the sugar market last week and the price which had been steadily declining, took an upward turn of ten cents on all grades. The announcement was made on Friday, and at the same time it was announced that Ontario flours had declined twenty cents per barrel. Pork and lard are somewhat cheaper. Prices quoted are: domestic mess pork, $23.50 to $24.50; American clear pork, $22.75 to $24.75; pure lard, 13¼ to 13½; compound, 12 to 12¼. Cheese advanced half a cent per pound and is now selling at 13½ to 13¾ cents.

B. C. VIEW OF RECIPROCITY.

Vancouver, B. C., March 2.—Produce men and wholesalers are not overjoyed at the prospect of a new tariff arrangement on the basis as proposed by the powers at Washington. The obliteration of the duty on fruit and vegetables they say will mean a greater amount of business with lesser profits. While the turnover will be larger, the staff required for handling, it is claimed, will need to be larger, so the monetary benefit will practically be less. It may mean reduction in the cost of living to the consumer. It will likely result in a bigger trade north and south.

HARD FACTS

Getting down to hard facts, does it make any difference to your business whether you sell good tea or another kind?

Then if it makes a whole lot of difference, what have you done to find out for yourself which is the best tea on the market?

Time and again I have paid the price for this space to tell you about Red Rose Tea, and you yourself have seen Red Rose race forward to a leading place in the package tea business.

But the only way you can prove its quality to yourself is to try Red Rose in your home. Many Grocers have done this and are recommending Red Rose as the best quality in tea at the price in every grade. That is why their sales increase so rapidly.

An Easier Feeling in Live Hog Prices

Following the Lower Tendency of all Live Stock—Arrivals in Western States Not as Large as Expected—Arrivals of Butter Are not so Large—Eggs Have Reached a Resting Place—Demand is Very Large—Cheese is Quiet.

The arrival of hogs in the Western States has not been as large of late, on account of the bad conditions of the roads, and as a result prices have shown a moderate recovery from the recent low point, but there seems to be a feeling that the number of hogs in the country do not at least warrant any higher prices than now existing. Canadian prices for hogs show a little easiness, following the break in United States prices recently, and also in sympathy with the decline in the price of cattle. Trade in provisions is keeping normal, on the whole, while it is noticeable that some lines are being neglected, which may be caused by the opening of Lent, which turns trade into particular channels.

Arrivals of butter seem to have slackened off at most centres and show a decrease over last year, and as a result prices are steady at present figures. Demand is keeping up well, especially for the highest grade, while Lent is expected to bring a heavier demand, which some dealers claim with the present light arrivals, may lead to higher prices.

Eggs, after their continued downward flight, seem to have come to a resting place, at least for a while. Demand is extremely good for new laids, and can only be supplied by importations from United States markets. Few storage eggs are being brought in, the trade in them having dropped off, and can be easily handled by Canadian houses. It is stated that a number of cold storage men have lost money on eggs this year.

Although trade in cheese is quiet just now, still the strength seems to be maintained, as stocks in most centres are light.

A report of the live stock market says: "It is noteworthy that during the last week, the tendency of all live stock prices was towards lower levels. The early arrival of the Lenten season, accompanied by a curtailment in the consumption of meat, will not make an improvement. The effect of the increased output of eggs is also being felt."

MONTREAL.

Provisions.—An easier feeling prevails in lard, owing to temporary heavy supplies. Otherwise the market is steady. Demand for hams is fair, and it is hardly expected for the next few weeks that it will show any increase in this province.

Butter.—One of the features of the market this week has been the stronger feeling and slightly advanced prices in the butter department. Receipts are considerably lower than those at the same time last year. As stated previously stocks are becoming lighter every week and are now in small compass. Lent is expected to bring a heavier demand and as a result of these conditions higher prices are not at all improbable before the new make comes on the market. Just at present the market is quite firm.

Provisions.—There have been no new features in the provision market during the past week. While trade on the whole is normal, there are some lines in which an impovement in trade would be welcomed. Live hogs at country points are now quoted at $6.90 per cwt. and locally at $7.05 to $7.10. The arrivals on this market during the past week have not been overly large, but an easier feeling prevails in the market, which some dealers believe may lead to slightly lower prices for hogs.

Butter.—Butter still remains stationary in price. While some dealers state that arrivals of the fresh article have been as large as usual, others say that shipments have been smaller, which they state will allow storage stocks to be somewhat reduced. Demand for butter is keeping up fairly well, but it is noticeable that only the highest grades are asked for, and the poorer quality is moving slowly. With only normal arrivals, butter prices are steady at the present figure.

Eggs.—With new laids quoted at 23 to 24 cents, eggs seem to have reached a resting place, at least for a time. The demand is extremely good, prices being within reach of the ordinary household, and a taste having seemingly been created for them. Importations of the new laids still continue from the United States markets, and only for the low prices there, the big demand here would likely raise prices. However, as long as supplies remain plentiful in the United States, it will keep the Canadian market at a reasonable basis. Storage eggs are moving slowly just now, demand having centred on the new laid.

Provisions.—Live hogs are a little weaker, a decline of 50 cents per cwt. having taken place on the local market during the week, the prevailing price being $8 per cwt. delivered at the stockyards, Winnipeg. Dressed hogs in the meanwhile are $4.50 per cwt. higher than the live ones. To correspond with this drop here, but due a great deal more to the drop on the U. S. markets, lard has again taken a further decline.

Eggs.—The egg market continues to decline with great rapidity. U. S. markets, chiefly Minneapolis, the source of Winnipeg's supply during the last month, have however advanced 2 cents per dozen during the last week. Diminishing of storage stocks and strong demand for new laid is the cause of this advance, the demand from Manitoba alone being large. In spite of this, however, fresh laid eggs can be bought considerably cheaper than a week ago. Practically no local eggs are being produced, and it will be two weeks at the least before they start coming in. Present prices quoted are 25c to 26c per dozen for fresh laid, and 22 to 23c per dozen for storage, although the stocks of the latter are practically nil, and only a very light demand exists for them.

Butter.—The prediction that spring is close at hand appears to have had an effect on the butter market. Manitoba fancy fresh made bricks have taken a decided decline in the last week of 4 cents, and are quoted now at 33 cents per pound. On the other hand, eastern creamery bricks had reversed their tactics and have advanced to 30 cents, while boxes are now quoted at 29 cents. The supply and quality of dairy butter coming in continue to improve. Stocks held are light, but the demand is small. No. 2 is now quoted at 19 cents, and No. 3 at 15 to 16 cents delivered at Winnipeg.

Suggestions for the Handling of Oranges with Care

Tampa, Florida, Feb. 28.—A fruit association in order to increase the consumption of oranges have been placing in each case a card which the retailer may hang up in his store, advocating customers to buy oranges by the box. It follows by this method of keeping oranges: "As soon as the oranges are delivered, open the box carefully, without crushing or cutting the fruit inside, remove the tissue paper wrapper, gently wipe dry each orange with a soft cotton cloth, then lay on a floor, or shelf, in a place where the temperature is as nearly uniform as possible and not too warm. The fruit may be placed closely together, but not touching each other. All that are decayed or soft in spots upon removal from the box should be discarded, and only the sound fruit stored."

This method might be used by any retailer in order to increase his orange sales or the method of keeping might be of value to the grocer who does not handle a very large amount of fruit.

Rolled Oats Reduced 15c Per Bag

This is Announced by Toronto Millers and Caused by Continued Lowness of Oat Prices—Trade is Not Overly Brisk in This Line—Business in Flour is Slack—Manitoba Flour Unchanged—Wheat Prices Lower—Ontario Flour Has Been Reduced by Some Mills.

Trade in flour still continues at a low level, although a slight improvement is reported from some centres. The wheat market is at a lower level than it has been for some time, No. 1 Northern Manitoba being quoted at 97 cents in Toronto, as aginst $1.04 six weeks ago. While the May option on wheat at Winnipeg was $1.08½ in the middle of August last, at the present time it is 91¼, a drop of 17¼ cents. If wheat prices go lower, or even if the present prices continue long to show that no reaction is going to take place, some millers believe that there will be some reduction in the price of flour.

Ontario wheat has been steadily declining in price, and has now reached the 80 cent level. As a result some of the mills have made a reduction in this class of flour ranging from 20 to 30 cents per barrel, although there are others who show no change in quotations. Ontario flour in New Brunswick is quoted at a reduction of 20 cents per barrel.

Trade in Ontario flour is extremely slack just now, and as there has been an absence of inquiries at any price, it is a question as to whether reduction in price will have any effect in stimulating trade.

The Canadian visible supply of wheat is 9,784,000 bushels, as against 8,271,000 bushels at this time last year. In the United States the visible supply is 41,472,000 as against 25,515,000 bushesl last year.

The flour situation in the United States shows no improvement and trade is dull. A report from New York says: "The week's reports from the important milling centres throughout the country show conditions as unsatisfactory as in New York to the point of discouragement. Prices have been reduced to the lowest in three years, but do not tempt buyers beyond their routine requirements. Buyers impressed with the declining wheat prices seem about to have withdrawn from the market. Even offers at very low prices rarely tempt them on any but very small lots."

A reduction of 15 cents per bag has taken place in the price of rolled oats on account of the lowness of oat prices. Then again trade has not come up to the standard that some mills expected for this season, and some of them having more stocks on hand than they wished, believed that by lowering prices, the demand for this line might be stimulated. The Canadian visible supply of oats is 6,925,000 bushels, as compared with 4,493,000 bushels last year.

MONTREAL.

Flour.—Price of flour remains unchanged, and the market is not materially changed. The stock of flour on spot early in the week shows a decrease of 2,506 barrels, compared with a week ago, and a decrease of 3,853 with a year ago. It is interesting to note that May wheat in Chicago touched 88⅞c a bus. on February 25th, as compared with $1.14 a year ago. A report says it is years since the international wheat situation was as depressed as it is at present, and the trade is looking for low prices to prevail, unless the present supply-and-demand situation changes, or unless there is an impairment to the present crop outlook. Continuing it says: Supplies are the largest for the season in years, if not the largest on record. How low prices will go is a question that puzzles the trade; until the 13,000,000 bus. held in Canada are disposed of, the tendency is to go on the buying side.

In the meantime, reports of demand for Canadian wheat from European buyers are improving. The stock as compared with a year ago in Canada shows an increase of 508,304 bus.

Flour.—Manitoba flours continue at the same price as last week, with 1st patents quoted at $5.40 per cwt. No. 1 Northern Manitoba wheat is now quoted at 97 cents per bushel, a reduction of 2 cents over last week, and of 7 cents in the past six weeks. With prices hovering around this level, the flour market is weaker than it has been for some time. One miller expressed the opinion that if wheat continues at this point long, to show that there is going to be no reaction, he expected flour prices would show some reduction. On account of the slackness of the flour trade, some dealers thought that some of the big mills might reduce prices to stimulate trade, but it was also pointed out that some of the mills will not be in a hurry to reduce prices, having bought wheat at a higher figure than exists to-day.

Ontario wheat has been steadily declining, and is now quoted at 80 cents. Some of the mills have reduced the price of Ontario flour from 20 to 30 cents per barrel, but there is some differences in Flour.—An improvement has taken place here in the domestic demand for flour, while fairly good export enquiry is also in existence. A decline in prices appeared imminent at one time, but no change has taken place so far. These conditions are rather different from those prevailing across the line, where during the last two weeks many mills have been forced to close down, owing to the large stocks of flour and light demand, both domestic and export.

Larger Profits are Returned by Fancy Groceries

"It is in the interest of the merchant to push those lines of groceries that pay the best profit," said a Calgary retailer recently. "They should be given the most prominence in both the window and counter display. Fancy groceries, for which there is not a large demand, can be included in this class, and the grocer who gets behind these lines, will find it very profitable work.

"The demand for fancy groceries will not grow in itself," said he. "Customers must be first interested in them, and in time they will begin to ask for them. The demand for many lines of groceries could be greatly increased if they were presented to customers in a proper manner.

"Each clerk should have a display of some of these lines at his counter. He should thoroughly know the articles and be able to talk intelligently about them. Then, when the customer had made a purchase, this line could be shown her. The clerk should not be discouraged if he does not make a sale each time; that cannot be expected. The customer may not want to purchase just at that time, but she will probably be interested, and perhaps at some future date, it will mean a sale.

"Besides the interior display," continued the dealer, "the show window is valuable in briging these lines before the customers. When a display is made, there should almost always be a show card, descriptive of the goods. Advertising is another medium. In this way people other than those who visit or pass the store are interested."

The Best Apples Advance in Montreal

Highest Quality are Quoted at $8 There — Florida Celery and Lettuce are Beginning to Arrive—General Scarcity of Grapes —Prices Have Advanced—Potatoes are Higher in Winnipeg and Vancouver.

Florida celery is now arriving on the Canadian markets and is partly taking the place of the California article. California celery has not been as good a crop this year as usual. It is grown on the low land and the wet weather in that State made it impossible for the growers to get on the land to look after its growth, so that the shipments will be shorter than in other years. In some districts the land was completely flooded, destroying the crop completely. Florida lettuce is also beginning to arrive.

There must be a general satifaction from grower to consumer in California oranges which continue in large shipments and of excellent quality. On Feb. 21 and 22, the shipment of oranges was 481 cars, compared with 174 cars for the same dates last year, the shipment of California lemons for the same date were 27 cars against 13 last year. Some dealers are of the opinion that oranges may be higher than prices now quoted, as on account of the season opening early, it will close earlier and shipments may drop off at a time before the demand has slackened. The marmalade orange season has been quite satisfactory to most dealers, both wholesale and retail.

Both Malaga and Almeria grapes have been advanced in price. There is a noted scarcity, there being practically no Almeria to be had.

Demand for apples has shown improvement in some centres, even at the high prevailing prices, while in Montreal the price of the first quality has now been advanced to $8 per barrel.

MONTREAL.

Green Fruit.—Recent milder weather gave a certain impetus to trade in fruits. Apples here are in small compass and it is stated western holders are glad to send in their stocks here. Demand for apples is good, considering the high price. Quotations for first quality snows have advanced to $8. Oranges are in good demand, and a number of retailers have been doing an extensive business selling a fine quality oranges at 25 cts. a doz. It is believed that oranges are likely to advance before long. The lemon market is rather uneventful. A few strawberries are moving at between 40 and 50 cents a box.

TORONTO.

Green Fruits.—Trade in the different lines of fruit is keeping up well, and dealers state it compares favorably with other years. Oranges are still a leading figure in the fruit trade, while dealers have been doing a good business in lemons of late. It is pointed out that the consumption of lemons is increasing yearly, as the housewife is continually finding some new uses for this article. The lemons arriving just now are of fine quality which also helps to stimulate trade. Some dealers report that the trade in apples has shown some improvement in the past two weeks, but prices remain the same. Considering the price, strawberries are moving fairly well at 40 to 45 cents per box.

There has been a big advance in Malaga and Almeria grapes, owing to the scarcity of stocks. There are practically no Almeria to be had on the local market, and Malaga are ranging in price from $7 to $12 per case.

Vegetables.—Florida celery is beginning to arrive on the local market, and is partly taking the place of California, the shipments of which have been short of late. Some Florida lettuce is also arriving, and is quoted at $2.50 per hamper. Spanish onions are enjoying a fair trade at unchanged prices. Sweet potatoes are a little firmer and are quoted at $1.40 to $1.50 per hamper, while Ontario potatoes are selling at $1.00 per bag, with choice New Brunswick stock bringing $1.10. The trade in imported goods is normal, with beets showing a slight reduction in price, while cucumbers are a little higher.

Some yellow globe onions are being offered in 100 lb. sacks at $2.50.

WINNIPEG.

Fruit.—Trade in fruit remains on a fairly steady basis and small changes have taken place lately. The demand remains steady, and prices are unchanged. Stocks of apples are getting smaller, and wholesalers state that conditions in the east are none too encouraging for a late supply, consequently some predict further advances in the near future. Florida strawberries continue to arrive in small quantities. The shipments, however, vary considerably in quality. One shipment will contain fruit that would be hardly surpassed on the eastern market, while the next consignment will be almost unfit to be put on the market, the berries being small, and badly bruised, giving a general appearance of inferior fruit hurriedly packed and immediately dumped on the market.

Vegetables.—An active trade is still in progress in all lines of vegetables. Dried vegetables are all being offered by the hundredweight, and stocks are of fair size. Green vegetables on the other hand are offered by the dozen, basket or pound, and comprised mostly of southern grown stuff, the native or home grown supply being practically exhausted. Potatoes continue to soar, with prices per bushel in small lots at $1.10. Large quantities are now being brought in from Ontario, and a few carloads from the south, the weaker market there making it possible to import.

Lent Opens with a Good Trade in Fish

Large Business is Looked Forward to — Prices of Fresh Frozen Fish Are a Little Easier on Account of Mild Weather — Haddie are Plentiful and Reasonable in Price—Chicago Fish Trust Makes Cut in Prices.

The Lenten season has opened and all the dealers are looking forward to a large business in fish for the next five or six weeks. In the beginning of this week the weather took a little mild turn that resulted in prices weakening to some extent. At the time this was expected to be only temporary, as with good cool weather the market should be firm enough.

There is not much change in the general fish situation. Some of the houses are short of boneless cod and have had to turn down orders every day. Others report a sufficient supply for their customers, but it was admitted that boneless cod is not as abundant as in former years, and also there is not the same demand. Fillets which have been short are now in better supply, and some heavy orders have been filled. It might be remarked that the price is probably the highest ever paid. There is an ample supply of frozen fish, and the prices are a little easier. Haddies are plentiful and are offered at a reasonable price. All the wholesale trade agree that the trend is away from the pickled cod and Labrador herring of the olden day. One Montreal dealer states that as far as his business was concerned this did not constitute 5 per cent. of his total trade, where soem years ago it was one of the big features. Salt fish is, as stated before, generally scarce. However, there is plenty of fish for the demand, and because of the fact that demand is directed toward those lines in which there is a certain abundance, there need be no question about the bulk of business that is to be done. All that is desired is a continuance of favorable, that is, cold weather, in order to protect the handling of frozen fish. It is hardly to be expected that winter has really shot its last bolt yet.

QUEBEC.

Montreal.—Frozen fresh fish is just a little easier, owing to the suggestion of warm weather which the new week ushered in. Whitefish, smelts, green cod and haddock, all leading lines, are lower in price, but the drop is said to be only temporary, depending on the weather. It should have the effect of keeping trade at a top notch. Favorable weather is fully expected for the next four or five weeks, anyway. The big fish dealers have been deluged with orders, and the total amount of trade this year should pretty nearly satisfy even the most optimistic.

ONTARIO.

Toronto.—Several changes have taken place in prices of fish this week, which have resulted on the whole in making things more favorable for the retailer. In the fresh frozen fish, which comprise a good part of the general trade, there have been several slight reductions, while Labrador herrings in both barrels and half-barrels are quoted at reduced prices. The market is in an unsettled condition. The fish trust in Chicago is making some radical cuts in prices, particularly Northwest fish, but the feeling prevails in some quarters that it is an effort to convert some old stock into cash, and that the prices of first class fish will not be affected to any great extent. Trade is keeping up well, and orders show that retailers are starting the Lenten season with good sized stocks. Dealers state that there are no more first class fish in storage here than will meet the demand during the next six weeks.

NOVA SCOTIA.

Halifax.—The fish trade is brisk, and there is a good demand all round. The dealers have orders for all the fish that they can procure. There is little fresh halibut on the market, and the dealers have put the retail price of halibut up to 18 cents per pound. The market was practically bare of lobsters this week. Only a few small lots were received, and they were quickly bought up. The shipments to the Boston market also show a heavy falling off. The supply of smelts is also limited, and those coming on the market are of a very small run.

The receipts of fresh fish of all kinds are light, two small cargoes being landed here this week. There is no change in the salt and pickled fish markets. Stocks are small and prices high. Foreign shipments are also light.

MANITOBA.

Winnipeg.—During the week wholesalers and jobbers have been exceptionally busy preparing for the rush season which always takes place during Lent. Added to this the continued mild weather has caused many to believe that an early Spring is upon us, which has resulted in the packing of freezers and making all preparations for the spring when it does come. Stocks held in the city are fairly heavy at present, and although trade is still in a lull, it is expected that next week quite a different aspect will be in evidence. Whitefish, salmon and halibut are the staple stocks held here, and comprise the largest quantities on hand now, while several other varieties have been brought in for the Lenten season. Frozen fish comprised the largest list, mackerel being the highest priced, at 12c per lb. Smoked fish has also been increased, while Labrador herring and salt whitefish are being offered by the half barrel. New lists are now being quoted by wholesalers, and a few changes in old prices will be noticed. Present prices quoted:

Bad Judgment in Selection of Paper Bags

How the Continual Use of Paper Bags of Larger Size Than Required Can Total Up to a Big Loss in a Year — Clerks Should Fix Proper Sizes and Weights in Mind.

By J. W. Bryans.

The other day while in a grocery store I saw a merchant himself take a sixteen-pound bag to do up 25 cents' worth of corn meal, which could have been held nicely in an eight-pound bag.

If this habit of using bags tiwce as large as needed were carried out in all lines it would mean a big loss in the ordinary grocery store in a year.

The paper bag is an important item in the grocery store, not so much in the individual cost of them, but in the saving in their use after you have them in the store. Quite commonly merchants or their clerks take a bag twice as large as needed to do up goods. The smaller bag not only means a saving, but also makes a much neater parcel. When a bag too large is used, it makes the contents seem less, while the merchant should aim to make parcels of goods look as large as possible.

First Thing to Learn.

One of the first things that the clerk should be taught when he starts in the grocery business, is the proper use of the paper bag. He must be taught to use a little thought and judgment in their selection. For instance, all clerks know the size of bag it takes to hold different weights of sugar, and as corn meal is just a little lighter, he can judge what size is necessary for the different quantities. In the same way he knows bulk soda is about the same weight as sugar, and he will know the correct size to use for that. Similarly the right size for other articles can be judged, and when the correct size is found, it should be noted in the memory, so that when a customer calls for goods, the proper bag may be known without a moment's hesitation.

Use a bag as small as will conveniently hold the article and allow of its being tied securely. In case of such articles as eggs, a larger size should be used, in order that the top may be turned in to form a handle, so that a customer may easily carry them home. For one dozen eggs a three pound bag, and for two dozen a six pound, will be found to be the best size. But save wherever it can be done consistently with a well-wrapped parcel. There is no need to use a twelve pound bag for a half peck of potatoes where an eight will do; and eight-pound bag for six pounds of rice, when a six will do; a five-pound bag for a pound of tea, when a three will do, or any other unnecessary large sizes that the grocer will find in his daily work.

Quality of the Bag.

Care should be taken in selecting the quality of the bag. Light weight bags for such articles as sugar, rice and beans will be found to be the dearest in the end, on account of the number that break open in filling, and there is also the annoyance to customers to be considered. For eggs, oranges and other articles of similar weight, a medium weight bag is required while for biscuits, cakes, cereals and teas, a lighter weight will do perfectly well. A saving in bags may be made by having carriers made for delivering pecks and half pecks of potatoes, apples and vegetables. The goods can be dumped into some receptacle at the customer's home on delivery, and these carriers in a year save an enormous quantity of paper bags.

Devotion to Duty Won Big Custom for Nova Scotian

A story comes from a Nova Soctian town telling how a clerk in his anxiety to carry out his duties faithfully, and give satisfaction to the patrons of the store, won a customer whose trade meant a big item in the year's business of his employer.

A farmer entered the store one day last fall and handed this clerk a list of goods to do up, for which he said he would call in a short time. This farmer had never dealt with them before, and was preparing for a threshing at his farm next day. He had ordered a quantity of pork along with the other articles. The clerk was anxious to please this customer in the hope of securing his regular trade, and he took great pains in doing up all the items on the list, that the customer might find no fault. Soon the farmer drove up to the door with a fiery horse. The clerk, to save the farmer from delay, piled all the parcels carefully in the rig and, with a pleasant farewell, went back to work feeling that he had done his best to please that customer. Imagine his feelings, however, when, about a half an hour afterwards, he discovered that he had neglected to give the farmer the pork he had ordered, for he knew that it was needed on account of the threshing next day.

All afternoon the matter troubled him. When the store closed up at six o'clock, instead of going for a game of ball as he had intended, he took his bicycle, strapped on the meat, and rode eight miles to the farmer's home. He arrived there just at dusk to find the farmer, in a temper, hitching up a horse to go after the necessary pork. Expressing his sorrow for neglecting to place the pork with the other goods, the clerk explained that he had come out with it just as soon as he got off work. He helped the farmer unhitch the horse, and soon they were engaged in a very animated conversation about the crops and other subjects of interest to the farmer.

When the young clerk left the irate man was in the best of humor and appreciative of what the boy had done to please him.

Continuing this process of thought, he concluded that a store doing so must, under ordinary circumstances, give good service, and that night he decided to give that store his orders in the future.

Now that trade meant a big thing to that grocer, because this farmer had a lumber camp, which in the winter used up large quantities of groceries. The merchant was benefited to a large extent by this unusual attempt of a clerk to carry out his obligation, and that same determination to do his best will no doubt greatly help this young man to scale the heights of success.

ALWAYS RIGHT. SUN PASTE

Stove Polish is just right every time you sell it, and the boxes are always filled full. You have no complaints coming after you pass it over your counter. Why not make friends for yourself as well as for us by selling the stove polish which always pleases the housekeeper? That's SUN PASTE. Just push it and see them come back for more.

MORSE BROS., Props. - Canton, Mass., U.S.A.

Winter Time is Stove Polish Time

Stock and recommend

Black Knight Stove Polish

It gives a brilliant and lasting shine and calls for but a fraction of the 'elbow grease' required by other stove polishes.

Economical in use. Put up in an attractive box. Will not stain the hands. Feature this ready seller.

If "Time is Money" Then Why Not Save It?

Lost—one golden moment, on the Road of Endeavor! Lost, because your brain cells worked overtime when you tried to persuade that customer to experiment with those nameless goods you bought, thinking more of the extra profit therein than the dependable quality thereof.

Lost, too, because her time and yours was illy spent. Lost again because of the misplaced confidence that must prevail hereafter 'twixt you and her. "Time is money," gentlemen—why not save it by selling, pushing or recommending only "quality goods"?

Codou's Famous Macaroni

Not within the half-century mark has Macaroni of nameless makers ever been classed the equal of Codou's, and not within the lifetime of that famous producer, P. Codou, did he stop for a moment in his conscientious struggle for perfection in the art.

For delicacy, purity and cleanliness, the "Codou" pastes have acknowledged leadership wherever used.

Thistle Brand Finnan Haddies

Haddies caught, cleaned, cured and packed at the water's edge, under the "Thistle" trade mark, are as true, staunch and loyal to the highest standard of quality as the old Scotch Thistle itself.

Their cleanliness is always proverbial—their flavor is fine—they are genuine Haddies always.

Griffin & Skelley's Fine Asparagus

The natural, delicate, tender and toothsome quality of Griffin & Skelley's Asparagus is a bulwark of safety for the grocer who fears for the permanency of his over-particular trade. The private beds that produce this famous brand are guarded day and night by those who, seeking with might and main to hold the high standard up, never relax their vigilance over the growing stalks.

COLES
COFFEE MILLS

The pedestal mill illustrated here is the latest and newest design in coffee mills of this description, owing to the fact that it is constructed along the most advanced principle that has yet come into use.

The grinders both run at different speeds, as will be seen by the construction of the mill.

It is an acknowledged fact that: Granulating can be done more efficiently at high speed, while pulverizing can be done with less heating of the coffee at a much lower speed. These are indisputable facts.

Let the judgment of experts guide you, for they all decide unanimously in favor of this type of mill, which is Patent Applied For, and manufactured exclusively by us. Price—$150.00.

Made also for counter use. Price $135 00.

Illustrated catalog sent on request.

For Direct Current, $65.00

For Alternating Current, $75.00

Up-To-Date Equipment Pulls Business!

Slices Boiled Ham and Bacon down to the last ounce

Nothing so adds to your reputation as the installation of modern devices for handling your goods; and the will influence new custom to your store because of the clean and attractive way in which it cuts your bacon and ham. Incidentally it will surely increase your sales of boned meats, and will prove a very attractive ornament on your provision counter. The "Berkel" will positively cut at least twice as many slices to the pound as is possible to cut with a knife. Fitted with an automatic sharpener, and protected to prevent accident.

Be wise and investigate the merits of the "Berkel." Write us to-day for full details and particulars of what other Canadian Grocers think of it.

Maple Syrup and Maple Sugar

"Absolute Purity"

There's a Guarantee of Purity to Pass on to Your Customers—

Ours are brands made in the maple groves, right where the sap runs from the trees—pure, and lots of it. So we use it, only. No temptation to adulterate.

Our sap is supplied by members of our Association composed of farmers owning maple groves in the famous Eastern Townships, the finest maple district in Canada. Each member has a personal interest in our packing absolutely pure maple products.

We have a reputation to maintain - we will ever keep that fact before us.

You can always freely recommend, for purity, maple syrup and maple sugar branded

Simple, But Oh, How It Sold Dates!

Here's a simple little thing one grocer did that brought him three days of splendid date sales.

He cut our advertisement of DROMEDARY DATES from a monthly magazine—we advertise in nearly all the good ones—and pasted it on the front of his window. Over it was a brush sign, "We Sell These," and in the window a display of the cartons with one open. He says he never sold so many dates in his life.

DROMEDARY DATES are sure to sell if people see them, because they are the finest selected fruit, wrapped carefully in oiled paper and packed in cartons. They're clean, fresh, and indefinitely moist. All jobbers.

Retailers Discuss Many Reforms

Annual Convention of Ontario Section of Retail Merchants' Association in Guelph—Opposed to the Giving of Extra Inducements in Selling Goods—Inspection of Scales at Public Expense—Mail Order Evil—Organization Debate—The Officers.

(Staff Correspondence.)

Guelph, March 9.—Marked by a small attendance and a keenness of debate, the twelfth annual convention of the provincial board of the Retail Merchant's Association was held in this city on Feb. 28 and March 1st and 2nd last.

All told, including the officers, there were only thirty retailers present at the meeting. These could fairly be called representative, however, for they came from the east, the north and the west. They were all good men,—men with the interests of the association at heart, and from the moment the meeting convened on Tuesday there were none who failed to see that things would be accomplished before the convention closed. And so it proved. Much was done, and it is probable that when the next convention is called to order in Toronto sometime during the second week of February, 1912, the results will be apparent in the reports presented then.

Standing out, clearly defined, as the dominant feature of this convention was the question of organization. Long and earnestly was it debated, and it seems likely, that while no definite plan was laid down, there will be, during the year, a new general plan followed in an attempt to double or treble the membership of the Ontario section of the association. Keen men like G. E. Gibbard, R. W. Dockeray, J. F. Holloway, Dominion President Ziemann, Secretary Trowern and President Kelly, grappled with this small membership problem. It was held up on the one side as a pathetic evidence of failure, and on the other as a simple natural result of a campaign carried on without sufficient funds and without definite objective point.

Suggestions were made as to the best methods of overcoming the trouble, but, probably owing to the heat of the discussion no one took the precaution to embody the suggested ideas into concrete resolution form. Nevertheless it is hardly likely that the debate shall have been for nothing and results will likely be forthcoming during the ensuing year.

Welcomed by Guelph.

Guelph's welcome to the delegates was most cordial. His Worship Mayor Thorp in his address of welcome gave to the visitors the keys of the city, and the aldermen of his council vied one with the other in the making of everyone to feel at home.

Several trips were arranged for the edification of the guests, and, although the breaking up of the convention a few hours sooner than was intended, to allow of a few of the delegates getting home on Thursday morning, disorganized things somewhat, a most enjoyable time was spent by all concerned. The members of the Guelph Branch of the R. M. A., also allowed no amount of trouble or expense to stand in the way of the delegates having an enjoyable time, and their arrangements were carried through with a machine-like precision which spoke volumes for their own organization.

The convention starting on Tuesday, was to have continued until noon of Thursday. So quickly had the business of the meeting been dispatched, however, that late on Wednesday afternoon, it was decided that if the end could be reached by a late session, it would be done. Accordingly the convention really closed at midnight on March the first, at the conclusion of the complimentary banquet given to the delegates by the city and members of the Guelph branch.

There was but little reportable business transacted on Tuesday. The delegates were slow to report for duty and, as a consequence, the address of welcome given by Mayor Thorp, was laid over until Wednesday. Some twenty-six resolutions were however read to the meeting and apportioned off to the several committees for a report. Secretary Trowern and Treasurer Moyer also presented their reports. The evening was devoted to committee work.

A. M. PATTERSON, Brockville,

The Newly-elected President of Ontario Board.

Those Who Were There.

On Wednesday those who had registered were :—J. D. Wisdom, grocer, Barrie ; R. W. Waterhouse, Ingersoll ; W. M. Murdock, Chatham; J. Hessenauer, Berlin; C. B. Dunke, Berlin; F. I. Weaver, Berlin; A. Weseloh, Berlin; G. C. Klein, Hamilton; J. A. McIntosh, grocer, Hamilton; H. C. Occomore, Guelph; M. Moyer, Toronto; N. B. Cobbledick, Toronto; R. W. Dockeray, dairyman, Toronto; George H. Cooper, Toronto; E. C. Matthews, grocer, Toronto; B. McDonald, grocer, Picton; W. H. Fielding, grocer, Guelph; J. F. Holloway, grocer, Toronto; J. C. VanCamp, Toronto; C. W. Kelly, Guelph; B. W. Ziemann, Preston; J. Impey, Toronto; D. Kelly, Toronto; G. E. Gibbard, Toronto; E. A. Hales, Guelph; L. C. Lockett, Kingston; J. A. Beaudry, Montreal; Henry Wise, St. Catharines; John McDiarmid, grocer, Georgetown.

President Kelly Speaks.

On Wednesday morning when the convention came to order President C. W. Kelly (Guelph), gave his belated opening address.

"There seems to me to be no reason why the Retail Merchants' Association should not be a very proficient organization to every member," said Mr. Kelly. "We are as an organization deeply interested in the welfare of each other. Organizations of this kind are becoming more and more necessary every day. We must, as retail merchants, become united as one man; we must be combined from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and then rely upon the perfect organization of the association to protect our interests."

"I am informed," continued President Kelly, "that 50 per cent. of the goods manufactured in this country are manufactured in Ontario. You can realize the importance of the post of the retailer, when he stands between manufacturer and consumer. We must therefore protect the consumer from the unscrupulous manufacturer. We are doing so, and it may well be said that 'the brighter the retail merchants, the brighter the commerce of the country.'

"Competition, based on vindictiveness, should cease, and competition in excellence reign," continued Mr. Kelly. "There should be one big brotherhood of dealers. I believe this organization is doing excellent work in bringing the members into closer fellowship with one another. It is also enabling the dealers to observe a code of higher ethics in trade, and there is room for lots of improvement in that direction. This," he added, "should be a successful organization of successful business men and then, you will find, we will be a power to be reckoned with.

"I trust your visit to our city will be one of pleasure," said Mr. Kelly in closing, "and that this convention will be the means of uniting our efforts for the good of the retail merchants of Canada."

Address of Mr. Ziemann.

After the applause that followed the remarks of the provincial president had subsided, B. W. Ziemann, of Preston, the Dominion president, rose to speak:—

"The chief aim of the Retail Merchants' Association," said Mr. Ziemann, "is to place the retail trade on a higher plane, to make it harder for the retailer to do wrong and easier to do right. It is not desirable that the retailer should pray for his fellow man, one day of the week and prey upon him for the remaining six. The retail business should be made an honorable, responsible business."

"Nine-tenths of the consumers of the country have to depend on the retailer for their supplies," continued Mr. Ziemann, "we have men in the retail business getting as much from the consumer as they possibly can with poorest service. We want to eliminate those dealers and have men to remember that the retail trade is honest, upright, and true. For instance we cannot be honest men and pay our honest debts if we continue in price-cutting. I have seen too much of it, attempting to get trade from competitors in this way—and the result is very often bankruptcy. Is that man honest? There are men who fail in business because circumstances force them to the wall. But such men, as those who undersell their competitor, not caring whether he was able to withstand it or no, should be sent to join some of our bankers in the city of Kingston.

Association Advantages.

"As business men," Mr. Ziemann continued, "we should do our utmost to spread as widely as possible the aims and objects of our association. We have accomplished a great many things, as an organization. There is not a merchant in Ontario. who has not been saved his annual membership fee over and over again as a result of the savings coming to him from the Assessment Act. I am almost inclined to be sorry," said he, "that it was obtained as it was. Had the merchants been soaked, good and proper, and the association, afterwards stepped in and secured an amendment to that legislation they would have appreciated it more. Then, take the Trading Stamp Act. It was abolished by the efforts of this association, and it has saved the merchants of the country thousands and thousands of dollars. A great many men appreciate that.

"But there is a somewhat similar evil abroad in the province at the present time," continued the president impressively. "They have it here in Guelph, and they have had it in Berlin and Galt. I refer to this free library scheme. Now as I read the criminal code it seems to me that 'Trading stamps and similar devices' are offences under the law. I maintain that this free library business is a similar device to trading stamps. It takes from $500 to $600 to have a free library of 175 volumes. I have been talking to men in the book business who would gladly furnish the whole outfit for $100, including the case. What does the dealer get out of it? One man has told me it was the biggest nuisance he ever had in his store.

The Library Competition in Preston.

"When the solicitor came to me in Preston, we talked the matter over," continued Mr. Ziemann. "I thought it was illegal and said so. He answered that a prominent legal firm in Toronto had looked into the matter and had declared it to be legal. I said it was not a square deal to the merchant across the street if the proposition would bring all the business to me he declared it would. The solicitor dubbed me an idealist and prophesied that I would not, holding those views, continue long in business. For 20 years, gentlemen, I have felt bound to consider my competitor in business, just as much as I considered myself. That was the right thing to do and could not be evaded. It was the higher law."

"Now we had this thing broken up in Preston," went on Mr. Ziemann. "We managed in this way. When we found out the promoter was determined to push it I candidly told him that if it was legal, and he got 12 men in Preston to subscribe $25 apiece, I would guarantee that every other merchant would subscribe $5 apiece, and get something a lot better. The result was that solicitor left town. Two weeks ago another man came. He was fortunate enough to strike a few merchants who had not been talking to me on the subject. But, finally, they put it up to him to get me, before they would go into the arrangement. He tried to get on without me, but could not. Last Friday he came and literally begged me to go in, or, if not that, to keep quiet. I told him he was wasting time in Preston, and might as well go home. Finally he offered to buy me, not in out and out terms, but by indirectly asking what I wanted. I assured him that if my own brother were pushing his scheme I would oppose it as much as possible.

"We were successful in Preston, and there is no free library there. I advise you, if they come to your town, to fight. Get all the merchants to go in on some other arrangement. If we cannot get people to come into our stores without such inducements let us go to the wall. But I believe we can carry on business without clap trap of that kind.

ATTRACTIVE INTERIOR OF WINNIPEG STORE.

The foregoing is an interior view of H. E. Weldon's grocery store, Winnipeg. It can readily be seen that the proprietor appreciates the possibilities of his display space. Note the biscuit display case in the foreground and also the attractive arrangement of the two silent salesmen. The clean white coats of the clerks fairly breathe out purity.

Sending Out Travelers.

"There are some other matters I want to talk about," continued the Dominion president, "and one of them is the policy of the wholesale houses in sending out their travelers. A well-known hardware man told me recently that the wholesaler sends first a man to canvass the hardware merchant of a town, and, later sends another man to approach the contractor. That man gives the contractor an opportunity to buy his supplies by wholesale at reduced rates. I don't believe it is right, and if a wholesaler treated me as some hardwaremen are said to be treated, I would not buy from him five cents worth of goods. If a wholesaler would induce me to stock up with goods, and then go and supply the contractor so that that gentleman would need only a few lines I would declare it to be unfair. And that is the impression given to me by two members at least of the Hardware Association.

Same With Grocers.

"I believe the grocers are up against it in the same way. A traveler will go to a town and canvass the dealer and will then go to the hotels and boarding houses. It may be all right, but I don't think it's a fair deal that the grocer should be used as a convenience by the hotelman when they run out and find it impossible to get their supplies from the wholesaler.

"There is no use talking, we retailers are dubs used as a convenience by the public," declared Mr. Ziemann. "In the country the women will send their money to the mail order houses. They pore over the catalogues and endeavor to discover some item upon which they can save money. They send for it. When in a hurry they will send to the retailer around the corner. It isn't fair to us. We stock up, and when the people can't get what they want from the mail order house they come to us. We should adopt some kind of an educational campaign. We should take the people into our confidence. You know the average public believes the retailers are 'shysters,' who are always out to soak the public. Of course, we, as retailers, are responsible to a large extent. I remember a grocer in our town (Preston), who sold raisins at a price lower than they could be bought by carload lots. When a woman, after that went in to buy raisins from other dealers and could not obtain the same quantity they denounced the poor retailers as extorting an enormous profit, instancing the price at which the low-rate grocer was selling raisins. That's always the way it works out for the other man when one retailer sells at cost or less.

Question of Cost.

"How many of you here have gone into the question of the cost of an article to you before it reaches the consumer? You have to take into consideration your rent, light, and heat. How much does it cost you to sell goods? The lowest figure that is given is 17 per cent. That is the profit you must add to the cost price of the goods going on your shelves. I am told a certain mail order house in Toronto adds 25 per cent. to the cost price of all the clothing handled in that store, and the man who told me was the manager of the clothing department.

"Now when we buy goods—say at $12 a dozen don't let us say they cost us $1 each. They cost $1.17 each. That's what we want to do. Let us see if we cannot make a decent honorable living. We want to start a campaign and get some of the thinking public to believe we retailers are not as black as we are painted," concluded Mr. Ziemann.

Dominion Treasurer Speaks.

J. A. Beaudry, of Montreal, Que., Dominion treasurer, who followed Mr. Ziemann, conveyed to the meeting the greetings and best wishes of the association of the Province of Quebec. He was pleased to hear the Ontario president say that the competition of the future would be along the lines of excellence and quality. The merchants of his province, he said, would be glad to meet such a warfare. Now, instead of wasting time on reviewing the past they should make plans for the future—try to find out in what ways they could benefit the retail trade. Optimism was the faith to be developed. The men who achieved great things were all optimists, and he believed that there were enough men of that faith in the R. M. A. to make it a success."

Address of Welcome.

Mr. Beaudry was followed by Mayor G. J. Thorp, of Guelph, who, in a few well chosen remarks, presented the visitors with the freedom of the city. In the exuberance of his welcome, his worship assured the delegates, one and all, that even the jail key would be given to any one who felt it might be needed. But he was sure that the key would not be needed because he was acting police magistrate in the absence of the regular official.

Mr. George Gibbard, druggist, Toronto, and secretary of the Toronto branch, responded on behalf of the delegates.

First of Resolutions.

"Rome was not built in a day," declared Mr. Ziemann, of Preston, when the regular business resumed with the reporting of the committess. "And," he added, "we will have these resolutions kept before you in the hope that something may be built from them or upon them later on.

Mr. Zieman was chairman of Committee "B." which had to deal with all resolutions concerning Dominion affairs. His first resolution was:—"That this Convention again desires to express the opinion that it is strongly opposed to special privileges being granted by the Dominion Parliament aiming to facilitate the formation of Co-operative Societies."

He turned the above over to President Kelly with the comment that the committee was in hearty accord with its spirit.

Opposed to Free Deals.

"Your committee believes that good principles should rule in a grocery business," continued the Dominion president, as he tabled the second resolution which dealt with the giving of bribes and read :—"That this convention is strongly opposed to the system of bribes or gifts for the purchase of goods or any other scheme or device which may be considered as an enticement for the public to buy goods, and that copies of this resolution be sent to the Dominion Dominion Board requesting the said to forward a copy of the same to all manufacturers and merchants who have adopted this system." This was carried.

The next resolution which Mr. Ziemann presented to the attention of the convention with the concurrence of his committee. was No. 8. It dealt with the organization of a department of trade, and was carried. It read:—"That this Convention wishes to renew its request to the Dominion Parliament, to the effect of organizing a department of trade on the same basis as that organized by the Railway Commission."

Inspection of Scales.

There was some discussion over the next, which was worded as follows:—"That this convention places itself again on record and believes that it is unjust that the retail merchants should pay for the inspection of weights and measures, as such inspection is made in order to protect the public. That the Dominion Board be requested to take the necessary steps to have the law amended, so that the inspection of weights and measures be made the expense of the public treasury."

"Your committee is in thorough accord with this," said Mr. Ziemann. "As I said before Rome was not built in a day so this one will have to be awaited with patience. The public is getting the benefit and so should pay for the inspection."

J. C. Van Camp, undertaker, Toronto, ventured the suggestion that it might be fair for the public to pay half and the retailers half, of the expense incurred by inspection. But this was not agreed to. J. F. Holloway, grocer, Toronto, thought the public should pay the whole. B. McDonald, grocer, Picton, opined that the inspection as they had it was not the slightest use. A scale could go wrong ten minutes after the inspector left the store. He welcomed inspection —thought it was a good thing— but he was of the opinion that the inspector should be able to drop in unexpectedly and inflict a penalty if the scale were wrong.

D. Kelly, flour and feed, Toronto, agreed with Mr. McDonald. The present system was of no use. In his place, he said, an outside scale got out of order, and it was sent out to be repaired. Following that it had been used by him for a year without any inspection. He also thought a system was wrong whereqy a dealer was compelled to pay for inspection, even if the scale should prove to be right. He was in favor of more inspection and the public paying for it.

Secretary Trowern and Treasurer Moyer took a stand then in favor of the resolution, and Mr. Ziemann provoked a good deal of merriment by telling of a brass yard stick in his tailor shop in Preston, which was so covered with the stamps of the inspector of weights and measures, that it was difficult to see the graduations. "I've always wondered if that inspector thought that brass yard was prone to shrinkage," laughed Mr. Ziemann.

The resolution was carried on motion of George Cooper, plumber, Toronto.

Civil Servants to Pay.

Resolution 14 was the next and the last on Mr. Ziemann's list. It was as follows:—"That this convention desires to express the opinion that the Dominion Government employes should be forced to pay their creditors, in the same way as the public in general, and that their salary be seizable, according to the common law."

LENT AND OPPORTUNITIES.

One of the grocer's times of opportunity—times when the judicious and energetic use of originality always bring golden returns—is with us in this Lenten season.

As in the glad Christmastide, one thinks of high grade fancy goods, when Lent is in the mind. Unlike Christmas, however, there is no superabundance of fresh meats to make glad the heart of the epicure. And therein lies the grocer's opportunity.

What one of you can estimate to a nicety the value of a tastefully arranged display of fancy groceries at this time of the year? Who can tell exactly just what thoughts are surging in the mind of the jaded housewife as she glances aside at a well-planned window while hurrying home to provide a new meal from old material? She should be in a humor to clutch at a new suggestion, as the proverbial drowning man at the straw.

It is up to the grocers of the land to take advantage of this, her state of mind. Let him throw out his Lenten suggestions in his windows; let him talk them over his counters. Let biscuits, cheese, canned goods, marmalades, honey, olives, and such like be brought up into the forefront of his fighting stock and be made to make their mute appeals to the passerby.

The opportunity is his for the grocer to embrace.

HOW ADVERTISING IS PAID.

An authority on publicity recently made the statement that the men who do not advertise pay the bills of those who do.

This is a little different position from any previously taken on the question and, at first glance it seems a little daring, but he seems to have some reason and force in his arguments, when that declaration is probed.

The men who are best known in every community are the men who advertise and, generally speaking, they get the bulk of the trade.

Now, the merchants who do a big volume of business decrease their selling cost by reason of that volume. The merchants who do not secure that volume of trade have to dispose of their goods at a greater selling cost.

It has been said that dealers who advertise operate, often, on a selling cost of from 20 to 26 per cent., while the same cost to the merchants who do not go in for publicity runs in excess of 30 per cent., and sometimes reaches even the dizzy height of 50 per cent. In the former case the advertising costs were included, with rent, heat, light, insurance, and all necessary and fixed charges.

So it would seem that after all, the man who does not advertise pays the bills for the man who does.

CAUGHT BY SUGAR ADVANCES.

A traveler of a wholesale grocery establishment relates an interesting story about a Canadian retail dealer who wouldn't read The Canadian Grocer because he considered he was a closer student of markets than this paper.

"What is going to happen in the sugar market?" suggested the traveler, to determine just what the dealer did know.

By the way, the incident occurred before the two recent advances.

"Why," replied he, "it's as plain as A, B, C, that sugar is going down again and that in a very short time; I have been following up the newspaper reports and there is no question that it will decline."

The very next day sugar advanced as had been intimated in the market columns of The Grocer of that week. The following Wednesday up it went again making a total advance of 20 cents per hundred pounds.

Had this dealer been more faniliar about the sugar market it is quite possible he would have secured sugar at the price existing a few weeks ago. He might even have saved enough money to pay for a subscription to his trade paper for ten years; but evidently he was relying upon unauthoritative mediums for his information and lost the opportunity.

C. W. Kelly, Past President of the Retail Merchants' Association, says he is not a good, nor a wise man, who prays for his fellow citizen, one day in the week and preys upon him during the other six. Surely Mr. Kelly was not alluding to the delegate for the plumbers.

OLD-LINE GROCER—TRADE PAPER.

A grocery clerk unwittingly pointed a fine moral only the other day.

While on a business trip from Montreal a profession man "dropped in" to a grocery store in a well-known country town in the east. He was a keen chap, this business man, and a great believer in the value of reading up what other men in the world are doing. Incidentally he had friends interested in the publication of trade papers, and of the relative value of these he often spoke as he journeyed about the country.

Now this particular store was run by an old-line groceryman, with opinions as hard, and as fast set, as the Rock of Gibraltar; and it was run in an autocratic style. There was included in its equipment none of those contrivances that now are looked for in the modern grocery store. Needless to say "The Grocer" was not a visitor there.

During the inevitable conversation, the "Old Line" dealer informed the visitor he did not take The Grocer, and could not see the need of anyone taking it, or any paper, to keep abreast of the times. The professional man was up in arms in a moment, in defence of his favorite theory, and quite an argument followed.

Here entered the grocery clerk. He was an interested auditor of the battle between the two, but the "Old Man" allowed no lagging, and he went on with his work, weighing and parcelling goods. Finally he left the show room.

But the eyes of the Montreal man had been following his every movement, and after the door had closed behind him, to the proprietor he exclaimed' "Why, you need to take trade papers to instruct your clerk in the weighing of goods if for nothing else; that parcel on the counter is heavier than it should be."

The proprietor pounced upon the parcel like a hawk, and threw it on the scale. Sure enough the boy had given overweight. Vanquished, the "Old Man's" face hardened, but gradually the hard lines softened as the point of the other's argument came to him. "Send around some of your trade paper friends, sir, and we may be able to make a deal," said he, as the city man took his leave.

The point which the proprietor of that store saw and which induced his changing his whole idea of business, was that but a few such parcellings by his clerk, would pay for a trade paper, and that the taking of the journal, would be of educative value sufficient to mean to him a great saving in a year. There is not A SINGLE MAN who does not MAKE FAR MORE out of The Grocer, than it costs him. It's worth remembering.

Illuminating Comparison of Advantages of Systems—Instances and Examples Showing Savings From Figuring From Selling Price—The Method of Doing it, and How Great Merchant was Saved by Accountant From Heavy Loss.

By Henry Johnson, Jr.

In course of a recent conversation I got a new light on this question of the folly of adding profit to cost as compared to the wisdom of figuring always from the selling end. The man with whom I was talking was a dry goods merchant, wholesale, who had traveled around a good deal. He said he had often seen merchants figure a profit of 25 per cent. on certain items and then, later, close them out at a discount of 25 per cent., believing they were realizing cost, whereas, they were not getting cost back.

Try it, and see. You pay 80 cents for an article. Add 25 per cent. of cost and your selling price will be $1. Now, at the end of the season, if you conclude to close out, deduct 25 per cent. and what you have left will be 75 cents —5 cents less than actual cost to you. Had it been your rule to figure always from the selling end, you would have figured a profit of 20 per cent. on the sale at $1 and when you closed out you would have deducted 20 p.c., and then you would still have your original 80 cents—actual, original cost.

This particular problem is one which grocers are seldom called upon to solve, for they very seldom give "closing out" sales at any given reduction. But it will not be without value to all of us to study all sides of this question.

Lightning Calculation in Business.

What I have determined to talk about this week, however, is an article in the Workers' Magazine supplement of Sunday's Chicago Tribune entitled : "Lightning Calculation Art Immense Aid in Business," by J. M. Stewart. And the reason I reproduce so much of Mr. Stewart's article is because he so completely follows out the reasoning I have expounded in these columns.

"Perhaps a majority of the American people think those who can figure quickly 'in their heads' must be gifted with some kind of special talent in that direction.

"This is a mistake. Any one can become an expert in this science if he will give it attention. Much less study is required than in any other branch of commercial learning, the rules being few and simple, and, once mastered, a little practice will put the student in possession of something that will be of the greatest value to him."

And then he gets down to things which so long have interested us :

Curious Tricks of Arithmetic.

"There are a great many curious and valuable things connected with ordinary every day arithmetic and used by all of us who are engaged in any kind of business, which can be easily learned. If engaged in clerical work you will find much to aid you. If you are a young man entering on a business career, you can better your prospects. If you are a business man you can also profit ; for a knowledge of the correct application of figures is a necessary adjunct to business, and you will be able to learn things through this medium that are never taught in schools, but only in the course of business, most of them being purely inventions of the counting room and all exceedingly important.

"Take the figuring of profits, for instance. The text books used in our schools certainly were never written by successful men of business. If they were they would never contain such examples as the following : 'A man buys a horse for $50 and sells him for $75, what percentage of profit does he make ? Answer 50 per cent.' You will find in every arithmetic such examples. No more fatal and misleading ones were ever penned. They lead the student to think of the percentage of profit in an entirely false manner and cause many business men to think they are making much larger profits than they really are. This makes them prodigal of expense and often leads to a failure which with a better knowledge of percentage could have been avoided."

"Suppose a man to have in contemplation the sale of a horse on the basis of the above transaction. A broker approaches him and offers to conduct the negotiation. He asks a commission of 33 1-3 per cent.

"Now, the owner of the horse, having a profit of 50 per cent. in sight, agrees to this, and the broker, having completed the transaction, renders a bill as follows :

Sold one horse at	$75.00
Commission, 33 1-3 per cent.	25.00
Due seller	$50.00

"The seller's books would show a profit of 50 per cent. entirely eaten up by a commission of 33 1-3 per cent. Not good figuring, is it ? Still that is the way nine-tenths of our smaller merchants figure, which fact often accounts for their being small.

"Now, there is only one way to figure a merchandise profit, and that is on the sale, not the purchase. Find out what percentage of the sale is profit ; govern yourself accordingly, and you will not go astray. Had the seller of the horse followed this rule, he would have found his profit to be 33 1-3 per cent., and would not have made the mistake of giving it all to the broker.

"There is a great mistake made in ever considering the profit as made on the investment or on the cost of an article. Some teachers dispute this statement, but let them ask any successful wholesale merchant what he thinks, and see that he will say. Most of them hold that figuring that way precludes success.

"Always figure your profit on the sale. Then you will be on the safe side. To obtain the correct percentage of profit on any transaction subtract the cost from the selling price, add two ciphers to the difference, and divide by the selling price.

Example No. 1.

"An article costs $5 and sells for $6. What is the percentage of profit. Answer, 16 2-3 per cent.

"PROCESS—Six dollars minus $5 leaves $1, the profit. One dollar divided by $6, decimally, gives the correct answer—16 2-3 per cent.

"This operation is simple, and a knowledge of it being vital to any one engaged in, or intending at any time to enbage in business, it should be carefully committed to memory and constantly borne in mind.

"Never figure a profit on the cost, but always on the selling price. Should you not know the latter, but wish to mark your goods at a certain per cent. profit, subtract the per cent. of profit you wish to obtain from 100. This will give you the relation the cost bears to the selling price.

Example No. 2.

"An article cost $3.75. What must it sell for to show a profit of 25 per cent ? Answer, $5.

"PROCESS—Deduct 25 from 100. This will give you a remainder of 75, the percentage of the cost. If $3.75 is 75 percent. 1 per cent. would be 5 cents and 100 per cent., $5. Now, if you marked your goods, as too many do, by adding 25 per cent. to the cost, you would obtain a selling price of about $4.69, or 31 cents less than by the former method. Which is right ?

"When you take 25 per cent. off the selling price, figured according to the first rule, you still have your cost intact. Take 25 per cent. from the second sum, and see if the cost remains.

"Suppose two men engage in business and both essay making 25 per cent. gross profit. One figures his profit according to the rule laid down in this lesson, and the other adds 25 per cent. to the cost of his goods. Could they both show a gross profit of 25 per cent. at the end of the year ?

Great Merchant Shows Ignorance.

"A large department store changed hands. The goods in stock, to cover freight and other charges, were marked up 10 per cent. They were sold at actual cost, but for convenience sake were invoiced as marked. The inventory having been completed, nothing remained to be done but take off the 10 per cent. that had been added.

"The parties to the sale accordingly approached the accountant having the matter in charge with a request that this be done. The man of figures set about making an elaborate calculation with this object in view, when he was questioned by the seller as to what he was doing.

" 'Reducing the goods to cost,' he answered.

" 'Nonsense ! Just take off 10 per cent.' said the seller.

" 'Do you want it done that way ?' asked the accountant.

" 'Why not ?' said the merchant.

" 'Well just add 10 per cent. to a dollar and from the amount thus obtained deduct 10 per cent. and see if you have your original dollar left.'

"The merchant saw the point at once and said no more to the man of figures, who was saving him more than $3,000, which he would have lost and the buyer gained, without either of them knowing anything about it, and all on account of a little lack of knowledge of percentage."

I am not going to apologize for inserting this article almost entire for it is the right kind of stuff. Of course, all that "process" in example No. 2 is given merely to show clearly just how things should and must be figured. The live merchant will not go far in correct figuring before he will know enough to get these things together at a glance. But, as I have said before, go down deeply into this thing, taking all needful time, until it all becomes mechanical to you. You can invest time to no better advantage.

Newspaper Talks and Window Displays

How Davy Jones of Round Corners Neglected His Window Space and Failed to Develop His Business—Folly of Merchant Running Same Advertisement Week After Week in Newspaper—Selling Comparisons.

"Out at Round Corners," said a well-known traveler the other day, "is a general store that for the past twenty-three years has been presided over by Davy Jones. It possesses two excellent show windows, open to the view of everyone that passes, and which could be made effective selling agents by most merchants.

"I do not think they have increased sales very much for Davy, for, when I came upon his place last week I was not at all tempted to buy. He no doubt felt those windows had to be filled up with something, and to impress customers with the magnitude of his stock he had nearly every article he carried represented in the display. It looked also as if it had not been changed for a mighty long time.

Business Was Dull.

"When we had shaken hands and got started to talk, Dave refused to buy anything because business was dull. I said to him, 'Why don't you advertise?'

" 'Well,' remarked Dave, moving farther back on the counter which he always used as a seat, 'I can't advertise, because we have no paper in Round Corners.'

" 'Say,' I replied, 'you have fourteen feet of splendid advertising space right up to the front of the store, and you are deriving practically no revenue from it. How can you expect to, when you never change your advertising copy.'

"Davy sat still on the counter and looked extremely puzzled, so I explained to him that his windows were two of the best advertising mediums he could have.

Kept Windows Filled.

" 'Yes,' he answered, again quite calm, 'I know those windows are good places to show goods so I always keep them well filled up.' That was all.

"Now Davy's idea of window display does not meet with the approval of the up-to-date merchant, who does more than merely keep his window well filled up. In the first place, the window, in order to create business, must not contain a mixture of everything in the store. A display must first attract attention, and this it will not do if it consists of but a pile of different articles.

"Window advertising and newspaper advertising are somewhat similar. Keep the same old advertisement in the paper, week after week, and people will soon quit reading it, just because they have read all of it before, many times. It is the same, to my mind, with window display. When customers have seen it a few times, their interest in it ceases, and soon they pass it without even giving a glance.

Have Displays Interesting.

"That is why all the big stores frequently change the display in their show windows. They recognize, that if they intend to attract customers to their windows, they must have something new and interesting all the time. It is for the same reason that advertisers in the daily papers change their copy often, having something new to tell the public every day, and that is why their advertisements are read and why the progressive merchant's window is carefully watched." So talked the knight of the grip.

The window dresser knows well that a window filled with many articles, bearing no relation to one another, attracts little business. While an attractive appearance may be gained by the use of an assortment, and while it may even attract attention, still it will not have the selling power that is possessed by a display where the mind becomes concentrated upon one or two articles. The window that draws the customer's attention to one particular article and does so in such a manner, as to put the customer in a mood for buying it, is the valuable one.

The merchant should, therefore, change his window display often, having something new and interesting every time. He should make his windows a selling power. This can be done only by limiting a display to one line, each time. The importance of price cards in helping to make sales should also be kept in mind by the window dresser.

WOMEN FIGHT SHORT WEIGHTS.

It is reported from Indianapolis, Indiana, that the women of that city have organized to fight the short weight abuse. Several hundred women are said to have enrolled in the club they formed which is called the Housewives' Weights and Measures Protective Club, and over which Dr. Amelia R. Keeler, is president. The members are pledged to weigh everything and when even a shortage of a fraction of an ounce is found, a vigorous prosecution is to be waged by the organization.

RETAIL MERCHANTS AT HALIFAX

Annual Meeting of R. M. A. of Nova Scotia Urges Reforms.

Halifax, N.S., March 8.—At the annual meeting of the Retail Merchants' Association of Nova Scotia, A. S. Burgess, of Canning, was appointed president for the ensuing year, and Edwin Hubley, of Halifax, vice-president. The association recommended reform in taxation, so that the burden shall not unduly rest upon the merchant, as it is considered to do at present. This they would reform by changing the Assessment Act and placing a heavy license on peddlers. They recommend that the time limit for long-distance messages by telephone be extended from three to five minutes for any continuous conversation on a business phone. It was decided to join forces with the other provinces in opposing the parcel post bill. A credit reporting department for the retail merchant will be inaugurated at an early date, while the association are formulating a system which will make a cash business more general. The association, which was only formed in 1909, is making rapid progress.

TORONTO DEALERS TO R.M.A.

According to a Toronto member of the R.M.A. it is the intention of some of the members of the general executive, at its next meeting to go earnestly and carefully into the matters of jurisdiction. It is proposed to draw up, at this meeting a comprehensive and definite scheme providing for independent offices and an organization also separate, in great measure from provincial control.

To accomplish what they desire, the Toronto men say, it will be necessary to effect several rather radical changes in the constitution. The question, therefore, will not be decided hastily. But when the decision is arrived at it is understood that it will be submitted to the Dominion Board as in the nature of an ultimatum.

The alternative for the non-acceptance of the proposition by the Dominion Board, The Grocer was informed, is the withdrawal of those interested from the R.M.A. and the formation of a new organization. The meeting will probably be held next week.

When the Swing of the Scale Spells Loss

Grocery Broker Relates What He Sees in Stores Throughout the Country—Indifference of Clerks to Employer's Business Welfare—Things That Should be Considered in Handling of Bulk Goods.

"When in a store," said a grocery broker the other day, "I always take particular notice of the movements of the clerk and I would venture to say that five out of six clerks do not weigh correctly, and that in nearly every case the customer gets the benefit. The aim of most grocery clerks seems to rest in completing the process of weighing, and not in attempting to safeguard their employer's profits by giving correct weight and no more."

"If you watch a clerk weighing goods you will find, that, in most cases, they are waiting for the scale to go down. They seem to think that as long as they give the customer good weight it is all right. They do not think that they are robbing the merchant. Therein lies the source of a great deal of loss. It may be only the matter of one ounce which in itself does not seem very much, but with 100 weighs, think of what it amounts to.

Lack of Proper Training.

"This comes from carelessness and lack of proper training in correct principles connected with the grocery business. Very few grocery clerks can even correctly tie up a parcel because they have never been taught to do it correctly. This all goes to show that every clerk should have to serve an apprenticeship as they do in the Old Country. There they are taught all the essential details that go into the making of a competent clerk."

"There are, also," the broker continued, "a good many grocery merchants in this country who are poorly schooled in the principles of their business and who display the fact quite prominently in many of their methods.

"Take for instance the way many merchants figure the cost of bulk articles, taking into consideration the invoice cost without the addition of other extras, and the quantity that is supposed to be in the bulk container, but which in many cases is not. Now a keg of grapes is supposed to contain 60 lbs., but does not do so in many cases, the weight, quite often, falling considerably below that figure. Still, those merchants who do not take the trouble to find out correctly, will figure the cost according to that weight. When the spoiled fruit and the cost of parcelling is deducted, it will result in most cases in a loss to the merchant."

Depreciation in Fish.

"Another article in which the retailer rarely knows the exact cost is salt fish. They know the amount that is supposed to be in the barrel, but never take the trouble to find out the quantity they sell, or whether they are selling at a price that will pay a profit.

"There are few bulk articles in the grocery store that do not dry out to a certain extent and this should be considered in figuring cost. Nor can you take 100 lbs. of any article and weigh it out into different parcels and get 100 lbs. at the close of the operation. Even sugar, no matter how carefully weighed, will not give 100 lbs. to a bag. I wonder how many grocers know the number of pounds, they get out of an eighty pound cheese? I wager there are very few. If they buy cheese, say at 10 cents and sell it at 11½ cents, they figure that they have made a profit of 1½ cents or $1.20 on an eighty pound cheese while very likely they have sold it at a loss. If they would keep an account of the amount sold from one cheese, they would after that be able to form a more correct estimate of the price at which it should be sold in order to give them a profit."

"The other day I asked a grocer why he did not handle a certain article in package and referred him to a certain brand that paid a good profit. He replied that he was making a better profit on the bulk article. I did not agree with him, for he had not taken into consideration the paper bag, the twine or the time employed in weighing. He also had not remembered that he could not weigh 100 pounds, out of a 100 pound bag, especially in this article, which is seldom sold in quantities larger than 5 cents worth at a time, and which requires about fifty weighings to the 100 pounds.

"I have seen that article weighed and the clerk in nearly every case gives overweight, believing he can afford to because it gives a good profit. Which all goes to show," he concluded, "that merchants have to take many things into consideration in figuring their profits."

Percentage of Water was Much too High

Investigation of Sale of Cheap Butter in Montreal Stores by Pure Food Department Reveals Strange State of Affairs—The Fight Over Hankow Eggs—Grocer Goes to Court Over Loss of Fish.

(Staff Correspondence.)

Montreal, March 9.—In a number of smaller grocery stores in this city, butter recently sold for 22 cents a pound, a figure much below the market price. Suspicions were aroused and upon investigation by officers of the Pure Food department the butter was found to contain too great a percentage of water. The government standard is 16 per cent., whereas the butter in question registered as high as 44 per cent. water. The grocers involved were for the most part trading with a foreign element. In their defence they pleaded ignorant of the fact that the butter had contained too much water, accepting it without question from the manufacturers. The latter, two in number, were each fined $50 and costs. It is understood that the butter was "fixed up" by the manufacturers presumably after it was secured by the real makers. It was then "worked up" with water. This sponge-like property of butter was being used to a financial advantage until one of the inspectors asked for a sample for test purposes.

The Hankow Eggs.

The canned eggs case drags on from week to week with nothing yet accomplished. The two parties have entrenched themselves as strongly as possible—the Pure Food department with expert evidence to show that the eggs are not fit for food purposes, and the owners of the eggs with just as expert evidence to show that the eggs are in good condition. The nine thousand, five-gallon cans, are still in the cold storage warehouse in which they were discovered some time ago by one of the food inspectors. Owing to the notoriety which numerous seizures by health authorities in different parts of the United States had given canned eggs, attention was immediately centred upon these, and an examination of them was duly made with the result that they were ordered to be destroyed. It has been explained that the canned variety is simply the whites and yolkes mixed together, poured in five gallon tins, and then frozen. Naturally they remain in this state until required for use. Under ideal conditions it is claimed that these eggs should be fit for food.

Courts are Costly.

The average grocer believes in the futility of appealing to law for redress in many matters in which they are concerned. The individual believes this from his own experience. A police court case recently illustrates the point. A small grocer paid $4.86, the regular costs, for swearing out a warrant against a man who had stolen from the store a fish worth about ten cents. In court the prisoner admitted his guilt and asked for leniency from the judge stating that he had been under the influence of liquor and took the fish more in fun than from a desire to steal. He was allowed to go on suspended sentence, but the $4.86 was spent in vain even though the prisoner had caused a disturbance in the store. It is instances of this kind that have taught the grocer not to depend upon the courts and as a result he simply says "What's the use?"

HINTS FOR MERCHANTS.

The merchant should not be afraid to ask a fair profit on his goods. If you try to meet every cut in price on every line, you will soon run your business on the rocks of disaster.

The merchant who is looking for investments that pay big dividends, should remember that a book or trade journal that will increase the energy of the clerks or the proprietor, pay a very large percentage on the amount invested.

Arguing with a customer is rarely a good thing. The only results it is likely to bring is the loss of a customer.

Advertising does not mean merely filling up the alloted space in the paper. You must tell the public something that will interest them in a manner that will lead them to buy.

You may think you use lots of show cards, but there are a dozen places around the store where another one might mean more sales.

PROFESSOR SMOOTHLY AND LIGHTNING OIL

How the Guileful Patent Medicine Vendor Aroused Cupidity of New Proprietor by Creating a False Demand, and How it Needed an Accident to Remove Goods From Shelves, Once Purchase Had Been Made.

It was the new proprietor's first day in the corner grocery, and, as he dusted his goods and rearranged his shelves, he was dreaming of the big business he would build up in the old store. Enter the market medicine vendor, Professor Smoothly, in his rusty Prince Albert, greasy curls, and high silk hat.

He swung his grip on the counter and without seeming to notice the change, he inquired "Well how many to-day? two gross or three gross?"

"What are you selling?" asked the new proprietor.

"Oh! I see, a new man, ah;" exclaimed the professor, for the first time letting his sharp grey eyes rest on the young man.

For the next five minutes he expounded on the virtues of the wonderful Lightning Oil and how the people would have nothing else. "Why I bet you haven't a bottle on your shelves now. They will be after it but don't buy if you don't want to. The man round on the Avenue will be able to supply them."

That afternoon two old ladies each wanted a bottle of Lightning oil and one of the first customers in the morning was a little girl with three shining quarters wrapped in a note, "for three bottles of Lightning oil and please send no other." Then a colored man was so disappointed when his quarter was handed back with, "Sorry but I have no Lightning oil but will have some to-morrow if you will call again."

It was hard for the new man to miss the sale of those six bottles and the good profit it would have brought him, besides disappointing the people who must be the nucleus of the big business.

How lucky! there goes the Professor on the other side of the street with never a look at the corner store. But a sharp whistle and a friendly call soon brings him over and not many minutes had elapsed before one gross of Lightning oil was shining on the shelves and the professor had departed with his $24 less 5 per cent. off for cash.

That was ten years ago. There is still in stock one hundred and thirty-four bottles. The other ten met with an accident. Lightning oil is a sore topic with the little grocer but the experience in salesmanship and buying was worth something.

Farmers Demand The Best Grades of Seed Always

The seed merchant who wishes to build up a trade can do so, only by handling the highest grades of seed. The farmer is yearly becoming more exacting in the quality of the seed he uses, and if you wish a continuance of trade, you must give him only the best. The dedirability of working up the confidence of your customers, so that they will depend on you for pure seed is shown by the following item from a farmer's magazine in regard to the seed question:

Buy Only Good Seeds.

"People have learned a lot about seeds in recent years. A few years ago every kind of seed was thought good enough to sow on the land, and when good crops did not materialize, the land or the weather was blamed for it all. We have fallen upon better days. The farmer, though there are some who still cling to the old way, is not looking to see how cheaply he can buy seed, but how good seed he can buy. There is a big difference, bigger indeed than the difference in price between good and poor seed. Most farmers know good seed of the coarse grain kind when they see it, or they ought to know. It is not so easy, however, to distinguish between good and bad in small seeds such as clovers and grasses. Most farmers have to buy these every year. They are, therefore, more dependant upon the man who sells seed in buying clovers, etc., than in any other kind. For this reason the reliability of the seedsman will count for much. It is better to pay 50 per cent. more for seed to a merchant who can be relied upon than to one whose reliability cannot be vouched for. The Seed Control Act protects the buyer in a large measure. But even this cannot at all times hold in check the unscrupulous seedsman when he gets out after business. The farmer must select the seed merchant as well as the seed he buys."

RETAILERS DISCUSS MANY REFORMS.

There wasn't much discussion on this resolution for the reason that the delegates were firmly of the opinion that the civil servants at Ottawa should be made to pay their honest debts as had everybody else, and Mr. Ziemann's motion that it be carried, was seconded by George Cooper, Toronto.

For Individual Effort.

The work of Committee "C" which had been entrusted with all resolutions which affected general retail interests came next, with G. Cooper, Toronto, reporting. His first resolution was No. 3, which read:—"That this convention desires to express the opinion that it is strongly opposed to all schemes or methods the object of which is to destroy individual effort in trade, acknowledging the principle that the distribution of goods is made more economically by the medium of the individual merchant, and that this system gives more security to the public than any other way of distribution."

Centralization Better.

This resolution had met with the general approval of the committee. In the discussion before its adoption, however, G. Gibbard, Toronto, ventured to insist that the system of individual distribution was not the best, but, economically all wrong. It cost more to transfer a can of meat for instance, from a grocer's shelves to the consumer, than it did to take the beef on the hoof from Texas or Kansas. He made a plea for centralization—say four or five grocers combining with one delivery — as the better system and urged that it was the duty of the convention to arrive at some method whereby the cost of final delivery would be cut down, to the benefit of the dealer. But the resolution carried, the delegates not being ready to proceed on such a revolutionary scheme.

Publicity to Deceive.

Resolution No. 5, asking—"That this convention is strongly opposed to any system of publicity, the nature of which is to deceive the public, either on the quantity, the quality, or the value of the goods, or their make, or any system whose object it is to have the public expect an advantage which is not existing, and this convention requests the Dominion Board to take the necessary steps in order that the provisions of the criminal code on the subject be respected," came next. It was carried without discussion.

A Card Index System.

But there was discussion on the next one which dealt with the establishment of a card index system for retailers by means of which information in connection of prospective clerks could be obtained. It was as follows:—"That this Convention recommends the establishment af a service of information, the object of which would be to supply the members of the association with information on the morality and the ability of the clerks and employes."

Mr. Halloway, grocer, Toronto, was opposed to this; taking the position that it was entirely a matter for the individual retailer. We have allowed the system of recommendation which prevails in the Old Land, to fall flat here, and we hire a clerk largely by his face. Mr. Halloway urged an amendment that the last employer, the only man who could give accurate information, be called up by telephone.

Mr. Ziemann rose and urged as Mr. Holloway had done, that it was altogether a matter for the individual retailer, while, if passed, it would entail a great amount of work on the provincial secretary.

All About Jones on Card.

It looked as if the resolution would be lost when E. C. Matthews, grocer, Toronto, called on Mr. Cooper to explain his resolution. "Some years ago," said the plumbers' delegate, "we had a card index system in our business. It worked this way: Suppose a man,—call him Jones,—came to me for work. I would put him off until the afternoon. In the meantime I would call up our secretary and ask' 'Got Jones on the list? Is he of sober disposition? Is he punctual?' I get those answers right away," said Mr. Cooper, smiling, "and I know at once just what may be expected from Jones. It was my idea that the grocers and other merchants might be able to use the idea to advantage. I had no intention of saddling additional work upon the provincial secretary. My thought was to leave it to local branch secretaries."

Mr. Ziemann, convinced by the terse explanation, rose and signified his belief in the efficiency of the innovation, and the motion carried.

Mail Order Competition.

Next came resolution No. 9, reading: "That this Convention wishes to express the opinion that the retail trade in general has much to suffer from unfair competition from some stores doing business by mail, and we think the best means to cut out that competition would be to undertake a campaign of education amongst the public, and that in order to attain the object more economically and more surely, the Dominion Officers be requested to get out a pamphlet mentioning the facts and arguments on the subject, and which could be bought by the merchants in the different cities and towns, and distributed by them at the net cost of producing the same. This was carried.

The next resolution setting forth the favor of the convention of the subvention granted by the Dominion Parliament to the Canadian Press, was passed without argument.

Committees to Confer.

Resolutions 12 and 13, calling for the appointment of a committee, representative of the R.M.A., to confer with committees of the manufacturers and wholesalers, that better trade relations might ensue, were also carried. Then, with the hands of the clock pressing hard on one o'clock, the Convention adjourned for lunch, to meet again an hour later.

Afternoon Session.

When the Convention resumed in the afternoon, the first thing which came up was the consideration of Secretary Trowern's report. This, presented on the first day of the Convention, had not been detailed off to any committee, and when George Cooper, Toronto, moved, and E. C. Matthews, Toronto, seconded, it was taken up in open convention for discussion. Accordingly, Mr. Trowern, for the second time during the meeting, read his report, and President Kelly declared the discussion open to all.

"To the Officers and Members of the Ontario Provincial Convention Assembled:

"It is with great pleasure that I meet you here again on this, the Twelfth Annual Convention of the Ontario Provincial Board of our Association.

"To look forward twelve years, it seems a long time, but to look backwards it seems but a short time when we first decided to form an Association that would take care of and pronounce to the public that there was such a class in the community as Retail Merchants.

Shield of Retailers.

"Since the formation of our Association it is needless to dwell on the fact that it has been the shield and protector to all retail men, whether they were in our ranks or not, and those of us who have been in the forefront, bearing the heat and burden of the day, have been continually on the Watch Tower to see that no unfair legislation, either Provincial or Dominion, was placed upon us, and I need not add that the name of our Association is now familiar to all of our legislators, whether they are in the Queen's Park in Toronto, or on Parliament Hill at Ottawa.

"While, however, our progress in some respects has been encouraging and a great many excellent legislative enactments stand to our credit and the name of our Association can be found in a great many important public reports and records throughout the provinces of Canada, as well as on the Government fyles at Ottawa, we must feel that with all the good work that we have done that we are only on the threshold of our work.

Organization is Needed.

"It is this one thought that I would like to impress upon those who attend this Convention to-day. And with this thought in our minds and with the knowledge that we are a necessary and important class in the community and that our organization is needed and required so as to direct in an organized way the best thought of the best men and keep ever before the public mind "that if they want the retail trade of Canada to be placed upon the high level that it should occupy to give them the best and most intelligent services, that this can only be done by making it so attractive and so free from tricks and schemes that the best and most upright men will be attracted to it and can find pleasure as well as profit in their occupation."

"This is, therefore, an educational work and all educational work is necessarily slow to advance, so we must not be discouraged with our progress, if it does not seem to advance as rapidly as some would wish.

"The period over which this report will cover is a trifle over six months, owing to the change in the date of the fiscal year and the date fixed by the Constitution for the holding of this convention, so in making comparisons between what we have done at other periods of a year and during the past six months I trust that you will not overlook this fact.

Amending the Constitution.

"Since our last convention held in Kingston in June, 1910, my time has been fully taken up in an endeavor to carry out the various measures that were determined upon at that time. Perhaps the most important resolution as far as the future of our Association is concerned was the one requesting the Dominion Board to amend the constitution so that it would be opperative under the Dominion Charter. With the other members of the Ontario Provincial Board, I attended the Dominion Convention held in Montreal on the 21st and 22nd of July, and with the advice of the Solicitor of the Board, the matter received very careful and thoughtful consideration and the recommendation of the resolution was properly carried out. When this was completed, the Board then ordered copies to be printed and distributed, both in English as well as in French, and this required considerable time as they decided to secure sufficient advertising to cover the cost of the same, and I am pleased to say that this was done, leaving a surplus which will be carried forward to the credit of the Printing Account. While this work, as well as the carrying out of some of the other resolutions, comes practically under the work in connection with the Dominion Board, I feel that I must refer to it so that you will understand something of what has been accomplished.

Fighting Co-operative Bills.

"In connection with the work of the same Board, I have given considerable time, along with our Dominion Treasurer, Mr. J. A. Beaudry, in an endeavor to defeat the purposes of the promoters of the two Co-operative Society Bills now before the Dominion Parliament. In order to do this we have sent out a host of petitions, letters and pamphlets all over Canada, and to every member of the House of Commons, as well as to every member of the Senate, and also to every Lieut.-Governor and to the Premier of every Province. Hundreds of letters have been received in reply and answered, and while we have received a great many promising support, there is one letter that I would like to call your particular attention to as it comes from a Premier who is respected by all commercial classes for his wide acquaintance with commercial matters and who secured this knowledge behind a retail dry goods counter, the Hon. R. P. Roblin, of Winnipeg. In reply to my letter asking him to protest against the Co-operative Society Bills, his answer was as follows:—

"Province of Manitoba,
Premier's Office,
February 20, 1911.

"E. M. Trowern, Esq.,
21 Richmond Street West,
Toronto, Ontario.

Dear Sir;—

"I have your letter of the 17th instant. The matter to which you refer is one of considerable importance, and while I have not given the question very much consideration yet, but I have no doubt that it deserves more attention than some other matters which receive more consideration and are of less importance. I am not sure whether the Province can be represented as you request or not, but will meet your views if it be possible."

Your respectfully
(Signed) R. P. Roblin."

"Other letters are equally as important, and I refer to this merely to show that it requires very little argument to convince a Retailer on Retail problems.

C. W. KELLY, Guelph,

The Retiring President, Who Presided at the Meeting.

"Further Amendments to the Gold and Silver Marking Act, to the Act governing the Weight of a bag of Potatoes, to a connecting clause in the Criminal Law between the old Act and the new are now in progress and they have received all the time and attention necessary.

"The defeating of the Co-operative Bills, if we succeed and I am hopeful that we will, and the securing of the other measures in the Dominion House must have a beneficial effect on our Provincial work.

District Organization Troubles.

"Coming back to our provincial work, perhaps the most difficult task that I have undertaken is that of endeavoring to carry out the resolution to organize the Province in Districts. This work should be the work of one man, who should give his whole time and thought to it and who has nothing else to do, but knowing that it is a difficult thing to secure that man unless he is guaranteed a good salary and his expenses, and even then the right man is hard to find. However, it is an old saying that those who have most to do, do the most and, as I was anxious to give the resolution a good personal test, I took the Western part of the Province as an experimental ground. I started with three divisions, Essex, Kent, and Lambton, as one division. I went to Chatham and after addressing a meeting there and looking over the ground very fully, an organizer was secured and recommended by the local officers. The Association, not having any funds to lose or take chances on, I engaged him on commission, advancing him $15.00 per week, which would be deducted from his commission at the end of the month. I addressed a meeting for him in Wallaceburg and posted him thoroughly in what he had to do, giving him both fully written and verbal instructions. He was certainly a good organizer and a good talker, but the demon, drink, was his enemy and after collecting $75.00, he fell prey to the temptation and the officers of the Chatham Branch, with the able assistance of Mr. Westman, prevailed upon his family to make good the loss after he had been threatened with jail proceedings.

Another Man Secured.

"This was the first experience, but nothing venture, nothing win, and the Chatham officers secured another organizer and I fully posted him and went to Sarnia twice to address meetings and he certainly did all he could to interest the merchants and endeavor to create interest. He succeeded as well as he could, but it was by no means a profitable venture either for him or for myself, but he is still on the work and seems to know no such thing as "defeat."

"I then formed another district, consisting of Wentworth, Brant, Waterloo and Halton. I made Hamilton the first place of attack, and I secured out of a number of applicants, a man who had just sold out his retail business. I posted him thoroughly and addressed several meetings for him, both in Hamilton and Brantford. He was fairly successful and a very genial fellow but ceased because he said that a man who could do that work successfully, could obtain any position in the gift of the people and get, at least, twenty thousand dollars a year, as he would have to be living dynamo and a walking encyclopedia.

Pushing Farther Afield.

"I secured another man for the same district but he stopped when he found that he was not going to receive $15.00 a week and 25 per cent. commission besides. I then tried Middlesex, Huron, Oxford and Elgin. I engaged an organizer and he called meetings in Woodstock, St. Thomas, Aylmer and Tillsonburg. I went to Woodstock to address his first meeting and I found him so enthusiastic about the probable attendance that, instead of securing the Council Chamber which he could have secured for nothing or for a small recognition to the caretaker, he engaged the Town

Hall, which would hold about four hundred people, and much to his astonishment and my amusement, he found himself with the caretaker and two other merchants in a brilliantly lighted and heated building, which cost me eight dollars ($8.00) cash down, plus my expenses both ways, as well as an advance to him so that he could pass on to another field.

"He then went to St. Thomas and I attended that meeting. The attendance was larger but they placed a handicap of fifteen members before any one would pay their fee. The handicap still remains, and after several other attempts I was fully convinced that the plan must be changed. It is to this proposed change that I hope every delegate will give his best thought while at this Convention, and as time and space will not allow me to explain my plan here, I hope I will have an opportunity of doing so before the Convention closes. Because one plan does not work is no reason why they should all fail— 'and only patience and perseverance laid the cable.'

Transient Traders' Licenses.

"Coming back to Provincial Legislation, it will be remembered that our old time honored friend 'Peddlers and Transient Traders' Licenses' is always with us and at the last Convention a resolution was again passed to hasten it along. I have given that a good deal of time and its importance merits it. I am pleased to say that at the present time it is progressing as fast as possible. I have had the whole Act with all its amendments drafted out and at the early part of next week I hope to have them introduced, and when this is done I shall forward a copy to all the members and ask them to help as far as possible by pointing out to their local members its importance.

The Embalmers Bill.

"The Embalmers and Opticians Bills which received the unanimous endorsation of this Convention last year, I am pleased to say are progressing splendidly and I hope that our Association may be able to take its share in the credit of having secured for the Embalmers a Bill that will be a credit to the profession and especially after they have been striving as a single line Association for twenty-four years to have it become law and with our organization at its back, and their able generals in our ranks, we are able to secure it in one.

"All the other resolutions which were of a minor character have received due consideration and I have addressed many meetings and held many section conventions which have been very successful.

"Our executive officers, I am pleased to say are all working together in the best harmony and they have shown a great interest in the work of the Association.

"Our honored President has always taken his place when the Executive Meetings have been held and he has given the work of the Association his best thought and attention and I desire to thank him as well as the other officers for the great assistance and the kind and considerate attention they have given me.

Association Liabilities.

"Before closing, I must not neglect to refer to one of the most important matters in all meetings of business men, and that is our finances and our liabilities. As you are aware, for some years we have been doing our Association business and selling the results of our labor below cost, and the result is, as it must be in all businesses, an accumulation of liabilities. We have been doing too much for too little and, while we have an excellent asset, the Association has also a liability which has been accumulating for some time. For some years this liability found a resting place with the 'Toronto Branch' and while it really belonged to every Branch and Board of the Association, it seemed to receive more attention by the Toronto members than by any others and naturally it was looked upon as their property. I had hopes that when the Treasurer, Mr. Moyer, and myself handed over our duties of office in the local Branch, that our predecessor would have been able along with the Executive to have carried out their intentions and removed a portion, at least, of this troublesome enemy, but as this was not done, after some consideration our Executive took it over, subject to your approval, with the intention of making a strenuous effort to remove it altogether. This will come before you for your consideration.

"In closing, I must apologize for the length of this report, but long and all as it is, it would be impossible to go into all the details of what has transpired during the past half year, but I think sufficient has been stated to show that the best interests of the Association have been looked after and that under the circumstances nothing has been neglected.

"Of course it must be remembered that the work is greatly handicapped owing to insufficient funds to carry it along as it should be and if we had more money, I could employ more help, which is very necessary, and far better results could be obtained."

Membership Outside Toronto.

As Secretary Trowern concluded his reading, Mr. Holloway, Toronto, rose and said: "We have seen by this report how several endeavors have been made to organize the R.M.A. in Western Ontario. I should like to know the paid-up membership outside of Toronto.

Mr. Trowern—In six months of this year, 206 have paid up.

Mr. Holloway—"Why is it that the business men of these bright western towns have not been alive to the benefits to be gathered from being connected with this Association ?"

B. McDonald, Picton.—"What is the Toronto membership?"

Toronto Secretary, G. E. Gibbard—"We have in Toronto 389 members paid-up between March 29th and December 31st of 1910. I have not the statistics for the year prior to March 29, but I would say there were 200 more. It would be right to say we have 589 members, or thereabouts, in Toronto."

Mr. Trowern : "You will have to add to the outside provincial membership, all those who paid from January 1st, 1909, to June, when the last report was made."

Mr. Holloway : "My idea in asking these questions is that this has been dragging on for a long time. If we in this association cannot secure these live business men in outside towns, let us get an organization that can."

Approach Question Fairly.

Mr. Trowern : "Let us have an open mind in this matter and approach the situation fairly, with no wish to cast reflection on any individual. To-day we have no organization force, save myself and a stenographer. I'm not satisfied that the membership should be only 200, and I have, in my report, called for suggestions as to the best method of securing members. Last year it was decided to divide the province into districts. Now let's approach the thing on facts. I tell you that system will not work out. None of us have came upon a plan that can be considered infalliable. I've been working at this for a great many years and I have not, at least. An organizer, to do the work properly would have to be so equipped that he could go into the Hardware Man, the Undertaker, the Grocer, and the Boot and Shoe Man and tell in each case all the reasons why he should join this organization. There's no man in the room who can do it, so how do you expect an organizer can."

Divide Trade into Groups.

"My suggestion," continued Mr. Trowern, "would be to divide the trade into groups. Couple, say, the lumber dealers, builders' supplymen, and the coal men. These run together. One man well posted in this one division could get hundreds where otherwise none would come in. But we've got to remember this is no proposition to ask a man to work without remuneration."

Mr. Gibbard : "This subject has been introduced and it appears to me this convention might just as well face it."

"First of all, I never did like the name," continued the Toronto secretary. "There's something about the words. 'Retail Merchants' Association' that does not carry conviction. How is it the Boards of Trade are extending all over the country, and absorbing all the leading business men ? Why can we not enlist the best men in our organization? True we have a history, but no association can live on history. A great deal has already been done, legislation enacted in the wiping out of the trading stamp evil, and that of the Assessment Act. I know this and give credit for it, but, sir, we can't live on these things alone. The system is wrong, and if we haven't the courage to eliminate some things we never will get the confidence of Ontario."

Pres. Kelly : "While you state that the system is wrong what suggestions have you to make for improvement ? There's no use finding fault with a system unless you have something better to offer."

Suggested Improvements.

Mr. Gibbard : "I was coming to that. The system of this organization is centralization. There is too much of that and not enough local autonomy. The Provincial and Dominion officers are bothered too much about local matters. Local autonomy is recognized in all good governments to-day. I repeat, the error of this system is too much centralization. Also, there should be a permanent finance committee to regulate the funds of the association."

Mr. Ziemann: "The secretary has done valuable work which every retailer throughout the country should thank him for. His work has been worth and is worth, dollars and dollars every year in which we are in business. Let us get our heads together and find some way to help him. Anyone can criticize, but let us do something."

Mr. Trowern: "I've always stayed by this association because I believed I was doing good work, even if my remuneration has not been large. There must be harmony between local and provincial branches to obtain the best results."

Mr. Trowern explained in detail all of the financial and organization work that had been done covering a period of several years.

R. W. Dockeray considered that in his opinion it would be advisable to separate the Toronto and Provincial offices in order that the most successful organization could be worked out.

The discussion on organization was then closed by Pres. Kelly and regular business resumed.

The Treasurer's Opinion.

Mr. Moyer, treasurer, Toronto, then presented his report to the meeting.

In moving its adoption Mr. Moyer said: "How does the association stand to-day? We have a charter in speaking of which a member of parliament has said that its worth a million dollars. We have saved $90,000 a year by the trading stamp legislation. We have saved the merchants throughout the country no less than $1,000,000 a year by the Assessment Act, and who can say what will be saved in the Co-operative Bills. Now what is troubling us? There has been an old debt,—some $4,000, hanging over our head. I think I can tell you how we can pay off that. The country, in some parts at least, has not been canvassed for 3 or 4 years. There are a good many merchants in a good many villages who have been deriving benefits from work done by this association, who have never given a dollar in its support. If this situation were explained in the proper way to the province the merchants would respond, and pay off the indebtedness.

"But," proceeded Mr. Moyer, "we don't want to send out those letters of explanation until they have been endorsed by all who have the best interests of the association at heart. Then take municipalities according to their population and assessment, and rate them in this voluntary contribution scheme—according to the benefits accruing to them." The following resolution was then submitted to the meeting by Mr. Moyer, he explaining that he would bear all the expense himself, and was carried unanimously:

The Debt Resolution.

"Since the old debt of the Retail Merchants' Association of the Province of Ontario, has been for some time a heavy burden to the Association, and the members are anxious that it should be paid; be it resolved, that a request be made to every town in the Province to voluntarily pay a contribution in addition to their membership, and that a statement of the affairs of the association be sent to every village and town and the proceeds placed in the bank, less 25 p.c. for collecting, until the Provincial Board direct it to be paid in full, or, as far as it will reach to pay, on the old indebtedness and that this matter will be placed in the hands of Mr. Moyer the the treasurer, and that the papers or letters he may require to send out shall be over the signature of all the officers of the Board, the letter however to be submitted to them for their approval."

After A. Weseloh, of Berlin, had passed a few remarks along the line of what the good results would be if an organizer were to go round and explain all the benefits to be derived by merchants from connection with the R.M.A., the convention again settled down to business.

More Resolutions.

Mr. Cooper, Toronto, had been apapportioned a few additional resolutions and these were considered in committee as a whole.

The first extended the thanks of the convention to the Minister of Agriculture, for his making provision for the taking in the census of 1911, a census of the retail merchants of Canada, covering the value of their real estate. This was carried, motion of Mr. Trowern, seconded by B. McDonald.

Another resolution expressed the approval and appreciation of the association with the proposed amendment to the Criminal Law, now being asked for by the Dominion Board, whereby all those combines charged with conspiracy and agreeing, will be dealt with under the new act. This was carried.

It was resolved to elect two representatives, to come from outside Toronto, to the Toronto Industrial Exhibition Board, in addition to the two already sitting for that city.

Uniform Half-holiday.

Another resolution to come up was one dealing with the proposals that are being made by some public bodies to secure a uniform half holiday, and a uniform civic holiday throughout Ontario.

E. C. Matthews opposed this as unworkable. He said it would be physically impossible to have all the grocers close on Saturday afternoon, which now was the recognized half holiday in the mechanical trades. Accordingly, the resolution was amended so that the manufacturers would draw up a schedule of the holidays in the different towns and cities and give these cards to their travelers.

A resolution dealing with the formation of a Board of Arbitration for the association was passed on to the Dominion Board, on motion of Mr. Ziemann.

Another resolution read: "That this convention consider the advisability of adopting a sign or trade mark suitable for placing over the store doors of all members of the association and that leading papers calling public attention to the fact that the merchants over the doors of which these signs appear are endeavoring to conduct trade on a fair and square basis, and report the same to the board." This was carried unanmously.

In the matter of putting the collection of bad accounts into the hands of a collecting agency it was decided that the Provincial secretary should first be called upon to rule upon the advisability of using any firm that might be selected for the purpose.

Trade marks and the maintenance of prices was the keynote of the next resolution, which read as follows:

"That this convention wishes to re-express the opinion that it is in favor of the maintenance of prices on any article bearing a trade mark, and recommends that all retail merchants make a special effort to help the manufacturers who adopt this system." This was carried.

The resolution calling for the establishment by the Dominion Board, of a service of information to supply the names and addresses of all the customers, who make a practice of not paying dealers, was lost because it came into conflict with the constitution.

The convention endorsed on motion of J. C. Van Camp, undertaker, Toronto, the Embalmers and Opticians legislation now before the Provincial Legislature.

Health By-laws.

President Kelly as chairman of committee "A" then moved a resolution presented by G. Cooper, plumber, Toronto, providing for the framing of a bill by the Provincial Board, to compel the passage of by-laws in all municipalities where none exist at the present time, so that the quality of the plumbing done and the weight of the material used must be passed on by an inspector.

Mr. Cooper, in explaining his resolution, said that in many towns the plumbing was a vertible death trap. Mr. Trowern expressed his entire sympathy with the resolution and assured the mover he would do everything in his power to see that it became a law.

A series of resolutions calling for amendments to the constitution followed, but these were sent on to the Dominion Board.

Election of Officers.

The election of officers was then in order. N. B. Cobbledick, undertaker, Toronto, at once moved that C. W. Kelly be re-elected unanimously for a second term as president. This was done with a vim, but President Kelly informed the meeting that time would not allow of his taking up the reins of office for another year. Considerable pressure was brought to bear upon him, but Mr. Kelly was firm in his resolve. Then it was moved by Mr. Cobbledick, and seconded by E. C. Matthews that A. M. Patterson, of Brockville, be elected President. This was done. E. T. Steacy, of Kingston, was then moved up a step to First Vice-President, and A. Weseloh, of Berlin, was selected second Vice-President. E. M. Trowern was re-elected secretary, and M. Moyer, treasurer.

It was decided on motion of Mr. Van Camp, seconded by E. C. Matthews, that the members of the executive committee should represent the Provincial association on the Dominion Boards.

Dominion President Ziemann, of Preston, and Past-President Kelly, of Guelph, were then elected representatives for the province on the Exhibition Board.

This was the last order of business, but before the convention adjourned, Mr. Van Camp rose to express a few words of appreciation for the work of the Provincial Secretary. He was followed by Messrs. Cobbledick, Impy and Moyer, and by President Kelly, who spoke in similar vein.

Mr. Cooper then moved a vote of thanks to the Guelph City Council and local branch for the cordial way in which the delegates had been received and entertained. Amid cheers it was decided that the secretary should convey this to the parties concerned by the medium of a letter.

Banquet to Delegates.

In the evening a banquet was tendered the delegates by the members of the Guelph Branch, and the City Council. His Worship, Mayor George J. Thorp, presided. The program included, addresses by the chairman, Dominion President, B. W. Ziemann, Preston; President Kelly, Guelph; M. Moyer, treas., Toronto; E. M. Trowern, secretary, Toronto; R. W. Dockeray, President Toronto Branch; J. F. Holloway, Toronto; Alex Stewart, President of Board of Trade, Guelph; G. B. Ryan, chairman of the Water Commission, Guelph; Ald. J. E. Carter, Ald. H. Mahoney, C. H. Reid, J. A. McCree, G. D. Pringle, James Ramsay, H. Occomore, and W. Fielding, all of Guelph. About one hundred sat down to table.

The next convention will meet in Toronto during the second week in February, 1912.

The Markets – Sugar Sales Still Brisk

Even With Advanced Price, Sales Are Large in Volume—Raws After Declining Show New Strength—Molasses Are Firmer—20c Decline Reported in Early June Peas at Montreal—Also Advance In Wines—Due to Short Stocks.

QUEBEC MARKETS

POINTERS—

Canned Lobster—Price advanced.
Molasses—Firmer and price higher.
Ceylon Greens—Price advanced.
Early June Peas—20c. decline reported.
Light Wines—Up 10c. gal. and 25c a case.
Breakfast Bacon—Up 1c per lb.

Montreal, March 9.—Jobbers are unanimous in their reports that conditions are satisfactory, and, indeed, better than usual. Winter trade, up to the present, has been heavy, so the trade assert, and Lent has opened up business along particular lines.

Glancing at the list of changes above mentioned, the advances in wines owing to short stocks suggest the direction of attention to cream of tartar. The latter is dependent upon the wine supply and cream of tartar is already firm. Something may be expected if general rules apply in this case.

Sugar at its recent high price has been moving well even though there was heavy business during the period of low prices a few weeks ago. An idea of the amount of sugar purchased during part of that time is given on this page. Opinion is divided as to future movements. Some looking for a reversion on account of the weakness in the primary market as announced early this week. Others look for stationary prices until navigation opens. But sugar is always sugar and anything is likely to happen.

The canned goods situation is interesting. Gallon apples are higher and those possessing stocks are not especially eager to dispose of them. Canned lobster is higher in sympathy with the primary markets. Tomatoes are firm, and the general opinion is that the supply is not at all adequate for the demand that will be felt throughout the summer.

Teas are monotonously firm and there is no strain of weakness in the future.

Stocks of evaporated apples are growing smaller and likewise the price is firming up. Present grocery conditions are pleasing to the trade who look for a good year.

Sugar—Jobbers report satisfactory business at the recently advanced prices; and this in the face of the heavy purchasing during the period when prices were at their lowest. A wholesaler stated this week that during about ten days when sugar was down, Montreal refiners sold from 50,000 to 60,000 barrels. This is practically 180,000 bags. A little arithmetic will show that the total amount of money involved was not far from a million dollars. This is said to be something of a record. This jobber stated that he advised his customers to buy at that time, thus taking advantage of the low prices and also anticipating an advance which he felt was due. The present feeling is not unanimous. Some do not expect any immediate change, others look to the slight weakness apparent this week to bring about another decline. The general feeling seems to be that refined will not weaken, at least until the opening of navigation, but anything is likely to happen before that time.

Syrups and Molasses—Molasses are firmer and are quoted at slight advances. Demand shows some improvement. Some jobbers expect molasses to follow the sugar market and, to a certain extent, explain the strength of the molasses market by the strength of sugar now. Syrups are sharing a good trade which should run along at a good figure for some weeks yet.

POINTERS—

Sugar—Shows strength.

Brazil Nuts—Scarce and dearer.

Best Quality Beans—Firmer.

Evaps—Scarce.

Toronto, March 9.—Wholesalers report a slight improvement in the grocery trade during the week. The increase is, however, confined mostly to the country districts, and city trade is about marking time. They report that collections are fair.

The two advances in sugar last week brought the price in Toronto up to $4.50 and even at the advanced figure, sugar sales have been large. The raw market, after declining slightly at the first of the week, shows some new strength. The market will be governed according to conditions as they arise from day to day. It seems to have resolved itself into a battle between holders and refiners, and prices depend a great deal on which one is forced to comply with the terms of the other.

Brazil nuts on this market are extremely scarce and higher prices are asked. New crop is beginning to arrive in New York but no important additions to the supply are expected for a time.

There seems to be a plentiful supply of beans of low quality, which find little sale on this market, but the best quality beans are none too plentiful and some dealers are asking higher prices.

Evaporated apples continue in small supply with prunes and other dried fruits maintaining their firm position.

Sugar—With the second advance in sugar noted in last week's issue, the price in Toronto is now $4.50 or 20c above the lowest point reached this year. The demand has kept up well since the last advance, some dealers evidently expecting prices to go higher. The market is steady at the present time and shows considerable strength but whether this will become marked enough to cause a further advance is a moot question. The movement of the market will be governed by reports as they arrive from day to day. The market seems to resolve itself into a question of whether the grower will be able to continue to control the raw crop. There was some decline in raws at the first of the week, but the market has again stiffened up with European beet at 9s 10½d. or equivalent to 4.07 duty paid New York. Some dealers point to the large production of raws this year which must eventually be marketed, and which may have some effect on future prices.

Dried Fruits—No changes have taken place in dried fruits this week, and conditions remain about the same. Currants continue firm as the shortage in crops in all parts of the world becomes more apparent. Primary market advances have been mostly in common fruit which will no doubt turn attention to the better grades which have not moved in sympathy. Prunes continue scarce and high in price. Conditions of sale are more favorable now since both retailers and consumers have become convinced that shortage of stocks warrant the present high prices. One wholesaler stated that if he had to purchase supplies at the present time he would have to pay higher prices, in some cases, than he is now charging retailers. Trade is not overly brisk.

Tea—The firmness seems to be well maintained in tea and especially is this noticeable in Ceylon greens, as the total Ceylon crop in 1910 was less than the previous year by eight millions. It is too early to estimate this year's output from Ceylon with any certainty. Whatever increase there may be, however, cannot materially reduce the present high level of prices, for enquiries for Ceylon tea are increasing in all parts of the world. On the other hand, should there be no increase on last year's total, prices are likely to become still firmer.

Coffee—Trade in coffee, locally, seems to be keeping at a fair average. For the past two months the consuming markets have held off in purchasing, evidently in the hope that something would force the market downward. It may, of course, be due to the pending sales by the Government. Willet's & Gray's Journal says of the coffee situation: "All the facts of the situation in coffee point so strongly to an invulnerable statistical position for the balance of the season and next season, that nothing is conceivable to interfere with coffee maintaining its value, and probably advance further. Coffee has advanced because of small crops and increasing consumption. Coffee must hold its value unless crops overreach consumption or consumption falls below production.''

Spices—Dealers agree that trade might be brisker in spices than it is at the present time. Prices remain unchanged. Cloves are firm and reports give the receipts of cloves at Zanzibar during the first half of February as 5,200 bales, against 11,000 last year, 9,500 in 1909 and 3,500 in 1908.

Nuts—Even with the high prices, the trade in shelled almonds and walnuts through the grocer seems to be keeping up well, although the consumption on the whole shows some decrease. Confectioners are using smaller amounts and substituting other nuts as much as possible in the manufacture of lines that contain nuts. Brazil nuts are scarce on this market and as high as 17c per pound is being asked by some dealers.

Evaporated Apples—Scarcity is the key note of the ''evaps'' market as for some time past, and stocks are about confined to what wholesalers have on hand at the present time.

Beans—The market in beans shows little change from last week. Some dealers are asking more than present quotations for first quality beans in which there is a slight scarcity noted with plenty of the lower grade.

CANNED GOODS

MONTREAL.—While there have been a number of changes in the canned goods' situation during the past week some of them pertain to only particular houses. It might be once more mentioned that the feeling among the trade is of the utmost security for the reason that they state that canners are stripped of their stocks and whatever goods are to be had are now in the warehouses of the wholesale trade. One house reports a reduction in early June peas and the extra sifted. The former have been quoted and sold at $1.35 but this house now offers them at $1.15 and the extra sifted at $1.90. The reason for this is that peas are one of the first vegetables in Spring's offering and as the middle of March is now here it is not considered desirable to be caught with this high priced stock unsold. A representative of this house states they have more early June than they consider wise to carry, hence the low price now quoted.

Canned lobster are higher in sympathy with the high prices of live lobsters due to the present scarcity.

Gallon apples are also prominent. One wholesaler stated that he had refused $3.25 as a quotation on western order for 500 cases. Another jobber reported a sale of 600 cases to a Winnipeg firm at a price but slightly lower than this. All of which indicates the esteem in which the gallon apples are held by the trade.

Tomatoes 3's are moving out well and are firm at that price. It is reported that canned fish trade shows an improvment this week in spite of the opposition of fresh frozen fish. There is a feeling that tomatoes will not likely endure the demand through the summer to the time the new crop will find its way to the market. This feeling is rather pronounced.

TORONTO.—There is no special feature to the canned goods market, and a normal trade in the same channels is passing. Some dealers report an improvement in the sales of canned fish, which should become greater as the Lenten season advances, as retailers will likely turn to canned fish when the handling of frozen fish becomes more difficult. However, up to the present, their efforts seem to have been confined to frozen fish, they evidently taking advantage of the colder weather while it lasts.

NOVA SCOTIA MARKETS.

Halifax, Mar. 9.—An advance of 10c per 100 lbs. in all grades of sugars is the principal change in the grocery markets. This is the first time that the price of sugar has been put up for many months.

Eggs are easier and from now on the tendency of the price should be downward. New laid stock can be purchased for 27c, while dealers are asking 26c for case eggs. Butter is in fairly good supply, but the price holds firm, creamery prints being quoted at 29c and dairy in small tubs at 24c.

Potatoes are beginning to soar, and this week there was a sharp advance. Nova Scotia stock is selling at $2.25 per barrel, and Prince Edward Island tubers in three-bushel bags are quoted at $2.50.

Prices in most other lines are fairly steady. The local supply of poultry has

QUAKER BRAND

WE are now taking orders for the well-known Quaker Brand of Canned Fruits and Vegetables for delivery when the new goods are packed. To those dealers who have been handling these goods it is not necessary to say anything, but to some who are not acquainted with them we can say positively that they are business getters of the finest calibre and your store will look the better and be the better for having this high class line.

FIGS

FIGS are truly the only low price line of Dried Fruits in the market to-day, and to emphasize this statement we now offer Comadre Figs, packed four taps to the seron, 1910 crop, quality fine but somewhat sugared, at 3 1/2c.

NEW BRUNSWICK MARKETS.

St. John, March 9.—The markets were quite active during the last week and a number of changes are recorded. All grades of sugar advanced again and the quotations now are: Standard granulated, $4.55 to $4.65; Austrian, $4.45 to $4.55; bright yellow, $4.35 to $4.45, and No. 1 yellow, $4.05 to $4.15. Paris lumps are: $5.50 to $5.60. Flour, oatmeal and cornmeal are cheaper, the ruling prices being: Manitoba flour, $6.35 to $6.45; Ontario flour, $5.15 to $5.40, roller oatmeal $4.85 to $4.90; cornmeal, $2.75 to $2.80. Oranges are quoted low just now and nearly all the dealers are featuring them in their window displays. California navels are selling at $2.75 to $3 per box; Valencia's are quoted at $3.75 to $4.50, and Messina lemons are $3 to $3.25. In the vegetable line, potatoes are now held at $1.90 to $2.

SLOW PAYS IN B. C.

Vancouver, March 9.—It is doubtful if the demand of the wholesaler that accounts must be settled by the 10th of the month will work out well for the retailer. There is no way of hurrying up the customer with his payment, despite the fact that one per cent. discount is offered. Unless a dealer has more capital to put into his business he must pay closer and stock less. Even at that it will mean loss of interest, for the money is not always on hand, and application for overdraft has to be made to the bank in instances. This rule was decided upon by the wholesalers to catch those who are very slow in paying, but it hits all the others. They have the power to force payment from the retailer, but the latter cannot force his customer, however much he may need the money.

INFORMATION FOR BUYERS.

Supplied to the Trade by Sellers.

An error was made in reference to the cost of Clark's small-sized pork and beans in this column last week. It should have been stated that the price was reduced from 60 to 50 cents per dozen instead of from 50 to 45 cents.

Before long Montreal will have another large flour mill in operation. The St. Lawrence Milling Co. have erected a six-storey steel and concrete building on the banks of the Lachine canal. The situation is a good one, as wheat can be brought straight from Fort William to the premises without breaking bulk. It is anticipated that there will be a daily output of at least 2,500 barrels, while the storage capacity of the elevator is 350,000 bushels. Manitoba hard wheat only will be ground, and there will be no blending done. The managing director of the company is Col. A. E. Labelle, who is well acquainted with eastern flour conditions, having been former local manager of a large company in Montreal, while the vice-president, T. Williamson, is by no means unknown in milling circles, as he was an executive officer of the same firm, having been local manager and secretary. The directors include: G. A. Grier, president; Rodolphe Forget, C. J. Fleet, K.C., and Geo. Kent.

Donnelly, Watson & Brown, agents and jobbers, Calgary, Alta., and Vancouver, B.C., have opened a branch in Edmonton, Alta., under the name of Donnelly, Watson & Brown, of Edmonton, Ltd. The company will carry in the new branch their complete range of stock.

Dr. Rutherford, chief live stock commissioner for Canada, in addressing the Retail Grocer's Association at Ottawa, last week, said it might be a good thing to have meetings of purchasers and retailers so that a better understanding as to what was wanted might result. Dr. Rutherford astonished his audience in relating how unsanitary were conditions in the meat and vegetable packing industries before inspection was begun, and showed how different were conditions now. A. G. Johnston presided.

Practical Methods in Retail Stores

New Brunswick Dealer Interests Customers in New Lines by Giving Recipes—Show Cards and Price Tickets Praised—A Salmon Ad. Which Brought Results — How Toronto Grocer Sells Goods Over and Above Actual Demand.

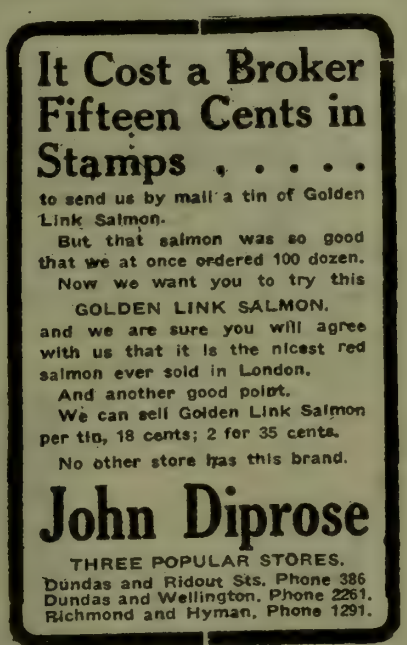
Gives Recipes for Foods.

St. John, N.B., March 9.—Supplying his customers with recipes of new ways to prepare dishes of certain foods, has been proved to be a profitable method of extending business in new lines by a dealer of this city. He has several of the best cook books obtainable, in his store and from them he takes recipes for different dishes which he uses to good advantage in his sales. In the store he has several signs such as: "Get our recipes for preparing food"; "We will give you a new metnod of preparing that food"; "Our cook books are at your service," and others. The grocer claims this method brings good results as it appeals directly to the housewives whom he wishes to interest.

Show Cards and Price Tickets.

Regina, Sask., March 9.—A local grocer is firmly convinced of the value of price tickets and show cards as a selling agent, and his store amply demonstrates this fact. In speaking of them he said: "At one time I did not realize the importance of price tickets, but the trade paper spoke so highly of their value that I determined to test their selling power. I put in my main window a display of canned tomatoes, which I allowed to remain for five days, but sales in that line showed very little increase. I took the tomatoes out, cleaned the window, and put the same display back again. This time I added a show card with the words: "Taste as if they were just off the vines—10c per can." That note in regard to the taste seemed to attract the customer and the price seemed to make the sale almost as if it had been talked up by a clerk and as a result during the next five days the sales in that line greatly increased. Since than I have been an advocate of price and show cards and believe that the time taken in their preparation is well spent. I made it a point to change them often, as customers like to see something different on each visit to the store."

Sells Goods Above Actual Demand.



Toronto, March 9.—When a customer phones in her order to R. H. Stewart, 599 Sherbourne St., he or one of his clerks aims to sell her something other than the articles she mentions. If he has a stock of fresh fruits or vegetables or any new line of foodstuff, which he is anxious to introduce, he has them on his tongue's end and they are suggested.

Since his trade is practically all of the better class, his customers are keen to take advantage of his suggestions and he finds that on many days he sells as much as $50 worth of goods over the telephone which were not in the first place asked for. His customers have confidence in his judgment to select goods and so he is in a position to sell the brands in which he is interested the most, profit and quality of course, always being considered.

Introduction to an Ad.

Landon, Ont., March 9.—In a recent advertisement, John Diprose introduced something "a little different," which he maintains, was the means of attracting considerable attention. The ad. is here reproduced and special attention is directed to the introduction: "It cost a broker fifteen cents in stamps," which while not relating in anyway to what follows about salmon, yet it had the tendency to make the ad read and it is undoubtedly a convincing advertisement.

Mr. Diprose believes in some catch phrase of this nature to first attract the interest of the reader, feeling confident that what he says later will hold that interest to the extent of causing the reader to buy; this is the ultimate result that every advertiser should strive to obtain.

Believes in Display.

Campbellford, Ont., Mar. 9.—A Hammond, a local grocer, believes thoroughly in display as a method of promoting sales. Goods in his store are placed in such a manner that they are open to the view of customers. Along the front of one counter, just under the ledge, he has numerous hooks placed, on which can be suspended pails of lard, syrups, jams, etc., thus increasing the amount of display.

Window Dressing Contest.

Winnipeg, Mar. 9.—A local grocer who realizes the importance of window display, is constantly attempting to produce something better in this line. He has several clerks and he gives them all a chance at window dressing to see which one can produce the best results. To those who show any adaptability for the work, he gives every encouragement, so that they may put forth their best efforts. Recently he stirred up a great deal of interest in this work among his clerks by offering a small prize to the one who dressed the best window. Each clerk was given plenty of time in which to make the display and in each case some good windows were turned out. A committee of three nearby business men acted as judges in the contest. As a result of the contest, a great deal of enthusiasm was stirred up, and just now there are two clerks for each window, constantly planning out some way in which they may present a better window than the two in charge of the other windows. This is, no doubt, greatly beneficial to the grocer.

A Piano Contest.

Vegreville, Alta., March 9.—Clements, Ltd., of this town for the past six months have been running a piano contest in which the local public school was successful. Votes were given on purchases and during the contest fully 5,250,000 votes were issued to customers. The two principal contestants were the Public School and the Roman Catholic Hospital, the former winning with 2,411,476 votes, while the hospital secured 1,674,000 votes, and to it was was presented a cash prize of $100. The company reports that the competition in every way was a success, their expectations being fully realized.

A Green Tag Sale.

Innisfail, Alta., March 9.—J. F. Fumerton, proprietor of the cash store here, conducted a green tag sale from February 8 to 18. During the sale, special displays of certain lines bearing a green tag were made, each day, and another feature was half hour sales. In addition to the reduction in prices, duplicate tickets were issued with every purchase.

Customers Do Own Discounting.

Kindersley, Sask., March 8.—A simple but unique method was employed by Robins & Reid, general merchants of this town, in a special sale which they recently conducted. The discount allowed during the sale was 25 per cent. or in other words one quarter off the price. Everything was marked in plain figures and customers were asked to figure their own discounts. The instructions issued by the firm read: "Take one-fourth off the market price; pay us the balance and the goods are yours."

The 25 per cent. reduction was given on all lines except groceries and feed.

Cash Prices for Two Weeks.

Innisfail, Alta., March 8.—G. W. West of this town, recently announced cash prices to be in force for two weeks and provided the increase in business warranted it, they would be continued for a greater length of time. Many substantial reductions were made in staple lines and the sale was such a success that it was conducted two weeks longer than at first announced.

Pleading guilty to holding up and assaulting John Hickey, a Kingston, Ont., grocer, Patrick Burns was last week sentenced by Judge Price to one year in the Central Prison. This is the maximum penalty for a crime of that calibre.

Put Black and White Cat in Cereal Display

How City Dealer Unwittingly Frightened Customers by Allowing Feline to Sprawl in Midst of Tempting Display of Rolled Oats and Wheat—Value of Absolute Cleanliness in Every Department of the Store.

As the average man turns with repugnance, at the table, from a dish in which he has come suddenly upon a dead fly or strand of human hair, so does the average woman become disgusted with a retailer who does not always consider as of first importance the absolute cleanliness of the goods he deals in.

There never was a time in the history of merchandising when precautions in this connection were not demanded: today, with competition spreading out rapidly, the dealer who neglects to make his care absolute is taking the first step to the deep gully of lost prestige, from which it is difficult to climb. It is always harder to get up a height than to go down. And where the retailer should exercise the greatest care of all is in his display window.

Cat Sprawled in Oat Window.

In a grocery window in one of the large cities recently, there was arranged an exhibit of rolled oats and rolled wheat. They were displayed loosely. The idea and general construction of the window were both good. But in the centre, basking in the sun was sprawled a large black and white cat. The feline was not of the cleanest, but there it was, making itself "to home," blinking up sleepily at such of the passersby who were attracted by the unusual feature.

Now it is quite probable that display did excite the interest of many who gazed in the window. But it is also quite probable that the interest which many felt was by way of making a mental note for the purpose of overlooking that store when next purchasing cereals.

Where Dealers Would Lose.

That dealer was undoubtedly bound to be a loser in the cereal end of his business. And not there alone. For where customers went by the door to purchase breakfast food, they also would hurry by when buying other food lines. No doubt the dealer secured, after a fashion, considerable free advertising but that could hardly compensate him for the assured loss of custom and prestige.

The time has arrived when all such things should not exist in the grocery store. While the rolled oats and wheat which went into the making of the display in the window were probably thrown out when it was broken up still that cat would leave a bad impression on customers and would lead them to think that the same conditions were allowed in other departments of the business.

People are very particular about how their food is handled before they receive it, and grocers must take every precaution to lead the customers to believe that the goods are handled in a strictly clean and sanitary manner. Cleanliness in display adds considerably to the selling value of the window.

Take the word of a retired grocer who made a great success in his business where he says: "Cultivate cleanliness; keep it always in mind, whether the goods you are handling demand it or no. And above all, see that no particle of anything gets into goods when you display them with the object of developing sales."

With characteristic enterprise Calgary, Alta., has compiled a folder which draws attention to its advantageous position for the handling of business of Southern Alberta, now that the irrigation project of a railway company there, is well under way. There is a splendid map giving a birdseye view of the country roundabout, and a mass of statistics speaking volumes for the growth of the city during the last few years.

Fire, which broke out in their four storey building on Notre Dame street, did damage estimated at $75,000 to D. C. Brosseau & Company, wholesale grocers, in Montreal. An investigation was held by Commissioner Ritchie but no cause was discovered.

Advices from Seville state that the stock of Manzanilla olives there is exhausted. Queens are reported to be in small supply, and at the present rate of consumption are likely to be exhausted before the beginning of August, according to some authorities.

Slightly Firmer Feeling in Butter

Arrivals Have Not Been Large—Good Demand, Especially for Best Quality—Provision Market is Unsettled—United States Prices Have Become Steadier—Egg Prices are Unchanged—Arrivals Fairly Large—Demand is Brisk.

The provision trade is fairly active for this time of the year, but it must be remembered that the Lenten season has some effect in curtailing the demand for pork products. Prices are lower than a year ago, which makes conditions for sales more favorable. One retailer recently said that on account of high prices last year, the trade turned to fish and similar lines, but that this year with the reasonable prices, it had again been switched back to its usual channels.

The market, however, is somewhat unsettled, and similar conditions exist on United States markets. While, last week, the market leaned slightly downward, the arrival of hogs in the Western States did not come up to expectations and as a result prices across the line have become steadier. There has been a bearish feeling regarding the course of the future market, but the movement of hogs, of late, has not been so much in keeping with that feeling as the bears have been inclined to expect.

Butter prices seem to be inclined upward and higher values in most centres before long would not become as a surprise, if present conditions continue. There has been a falling off in arrivals of late, both in dairy and creamery. There has been some increase in demand due no doubt to the Lenten season.

Just what the future in the egg market will be, is a question. Prices at present show no change from a week ago. Arrivals have been fairly free of late, but had to be reinforced by supplies from United States markets in order to meet the heavy demand. While our prices are only held down by offering from the States, and as prices are steadier there, it would cause the market here to become steadier. On the other hand, as the weather becomes milder and arrivals of Canadian eggs become heavier, it will have a bearish effect on prices. Storage eggs have about vanished from the markets. It is stated that a number of cold storage men lost money on eggs this year, and that next year a great many will adopt a different method of procedure.

While some dealers state that a final halt has been called in the downward trend of lard prices, there are others who seem to be uncertain as to future prices. According to Fairbank's circular, the world's visible lard supply on March 1st was 144,546 tierces, as compared with 111,653 tierces on Feb. 1 of this year, and 136,213 tierces on March 1 of last year. Present supplies and future hog prices will have their effect on lard prices.

MONTREAL.

Provisions.—The provision market is rather unsettled. Demand is considered good for this time of the year, and it must be remembered that Lent has a certain effect tending to curtail the demand for meats to some extent. Lard is easier this week, seemingly due to the rather heavy stocks now held.

Butter.—The market is a little firmer, conditions being strong enough to warrant a slight advance in the price of fresh creamery. Receipts are light, much lighter than they should be at this season and with stocks being rapidly depleted the outlook is toward even higher prices, depending largely, of course, upon conditions. Just now, the butter situation is steady and strong.

Provisions—Dealers say that trade in provisions is normal for this time of the wear. Live hogs are still quoted at $6.90, although some firms are quoting them lower, even as low as $6.75 per cwt. Dealers are getting particular about the quality, and over-fat or too heavy hogs are docked 50c per cwt. Some reductions are noted in hams, the large being quoted at 1c per lb. lower. In general, however, the market, seems to be steady at present prices. It is believed that lard has finished its slump, and a slightly firmer feeling is noticeable in this article for that reason.

Butter—There is a firmer feeling noticeable in butter this week, and higher prices are expected in some quarters. There is a fair amount arriving, but some shipments are not of the best quality. There is a normal demand, which has shown some improvement since the opening of Lent, but it is confined to the best grades, while inferiors are moving slowly. Fresh creamery and dairy prints seem to be in greatest demand, but there has been some falling-off in supplies of the former.

Eggs—Like a calm after a storm, the price of eggs seems to have at last settled down after the downward flight of the past two months. Prices are steady and unchanged from last week. There has been an excellent demand, as a result of reasonable prices, and the Lenten season. Arrivals are fairly free, but the demand can only be supplied by imports from the United States. Were it not for the offerings on the other side at lower prices, eggs would likely be higher here. Storage and pickled eggs are gradually being taken up, with practically no demand at present for them.

WHEN IS A BARGAIN?

Vancouver, B.C., March 9.—That a bargain is not always a bargain, has been shown by goods received by patrons in this city of a large departmental store. Not that any misrepresentation occurred. On the other hand, the goods sold were in strict accordance with the advertisement. For instance, peaches were advertised at three cans, for 25 cents, but it was found that the cans were much smaller than the ordinary kind, and the quality of the contents was about the same as the ordinary price. The same was the case with raisins and one or two other articles. The advertisement read alluringly, but the buyer read it with the knowledge that he had been purchasing a certain size of peach can, and did not think that the advertisement could mean a smaller size.

Maritime Editor Says the Dealer Expects too Much

Sackville, N.B., Mar. 9.—The Sackville Board of Trade discussed the mail order business at its last meeting, but without arriving at any conclusion. Some of the remedies suggested were co-operation on the part of the local merchants in buying and selling and more generous advertising. The editor of one of the local newspapers complains that while his paper had refused to accept the advertising of mail order houses they had poor support from the merchants whose cause they tried to fight. They has given the local merchants a particularly low rate and yet many of them were not alive to their opportunities and the advantages they might secure through using more printer's ink. He said, "If the local merchants expect the newspapers of this town to fight their battles they should be willing to do their part in assisting the fight and not leave the newspapers to fight the battle alone."

The general store of Jules Wiecker, of Notre Dames de Lourdes, Man., was destroyed by fire.

Wheat at Lowest Point in Three Years

Is Still in Unsettled Condition — Flour Prices Remain Unchanged—Some Improvement In Export Demand — English Millers Competing With Canadian and American Flour—Cereals Steady at Decline—Trade is Normal.

The demoralized market for both Canadian and American flour in England is reported to be caused by the low prices at which English millers are selling in competition with what is shipped from America. Although the English millers depend to a great extent for their raw material upon this continent, they seem to be competing successfully with flour manufactured in Canada and the United States. Drawing their wheat supplies from all points the English miller is able to mix our hard spring wheat with cheaper grades of other countries, and it is reported that he is producing a flour equal to our good export grade and underselling us by a slight margin.

However, export demand for Canadian flour shows some improvement, Prices remain unchanged, with wheat about the same as a week ago, but still fluctuating within a narrow margin and seemingly in an unsettled condition. One dealer said, "I do not expect prices to go much higher until the supplies of wheat are materially reduced, for supplies are the largest known for many years at this season." Wheat is at low water mark for the past three years. The world's available wheat supply has reached a total of 183,083,000 bushels, as against 145,678,000 bushels a year ago.

Crop prospects, as they appear from time to time, will have a big influence upon future wheat prices. It will be the same old battle between the bulls and bears as the season advances. If crop prospects are favorable, it will mean lower values, but the bulls will not be backward in creating a crop scare of the slightest signs that are unfavorable.

A United States report on the situation says: "While reciprocity has been blamed for a good deal of the present weakness, the situation itself, not only in the United States, but throughout the world, is against any sharp increase in values. The great desire at present is to find out when the bottom has been reached. It has seemed as if this knowledge had been attained several times, but day after day has seen new low records for the present crop, and, in fact, for three years."

Cereals are steady at the recent decline in prices. Canada's visible supply of oats is 6,579,000 bushels, as against 6,925,000 last week, and 4,792,000 bushels last year.

MONTREAL.

Flour—The flour market showed a few new signs of strength early in the week, but local conditions are but slightly changed. Quotations are unchanged. It is difficult to tell just what attention the recent strength is worth. Export demand has been more satisfactory of late.

Cereals—Rolled oats are down to a lower level, with business still satisfactory. The recent decline has had a certain salutary effect, putting new life into the market just when it was beginning to lag. Business competition, and weakness in the oat market, were reported responsible for the decline.

Flour—Wheat continues to swing within a small radius, and at the present time is quoted at 97½c for No. 1 Northern, an advance of ½c over a week ago, but flour remains stationary at $5.40 per barrel. The situation, on the whole, is about the same as a week ago. Some improvement is noted in export demand. Ontario wheat is about the same as last week, but, as prices of flour have been lowered by many mills, there has been an increase in demand that has reduced stocks to some extent, and some millers are inclined to ask higher prices. Winter wheat patents range from $4 to $5 at the present time, according to the amount of Ontario wheat used.

Cereals—Cereals are steady after the decline in price of last week. The oat market has held steady and no further change in rolled oats is looked for under present conditions. Most millers report very little difference in trade since last week's decline, and it is pointed out that this reduction is not large enough to be felt by the consumer, and that there is no increase in consumption. Dealers do not, apparently, look for higher prices, and are therefore buying on a hand-to-mouth basis. Trade is only normal in the other lines of cereals.

are prone to declare that there can be little or no difference in quality between one line of Soda Crackers and another. But if such people will just compare the lightness and crispness of a Mooney's Perfection Cream Soda with any other make of cracker they will realize at once that there is a big difference in favor of Mooney's.

SHORT TALKS TO CLERKS

By An Ex-Clerk

TALK BUSINESS.—Don't take up all the valuable time during which you are waiting on customers in talking about the weather. Make use of your time. Introduce some REAL business into your talk. It will be more to your advantage to say "We have just receieved another case of Blank's sauce, the kind you liked so well," than to talk on meteorological reports.

Your customer has already heard all about the weather in other stores and it will be a relief to her nerves, to have someone introduce something else.

ONE THING AT A TIME.—Don't go at your customer like a cyclone, or you may spoil the whole sale. How many times we have heard a clerk rush over everything from A to Z in less time than he should really devote to ONE article. He might just as well have saved his breath and his customer's nerves. Take one thing at a time and do it well.

WATCH FOR LEAKS.—Be on the lookout for any leaks in the business which may be cutting down the profits. You are in a good position to discover such things by watching and effecting real savings, you are making yourself just so much more valuable to your employer. For instance, you note that your smoked meats are drying out considerably. This means loss in weight. You had better, then, go to the proprietor and mention the fact to him and if possible give some plan for overcoming it. He will appreciate the interest you are taking in the business.

DID YOU EARN IT?—When the proprietor hands you your pay envelope on Saturday night, stop and consider. Have you earned the amount it contains? Has the amount of money which you have received, been a good investment for your employer? Have the returns been satisfactory? Think well over this matter and the chances are you will go back next week with plans to increase your usefulness to your employer. It is the man who pays a big dividend that gets the big salary.

CULTIVATE GOOD PENMANSHIP.—Remember there can be no excuse for a man to write so badly that the customer has trouble in deciphering the bill. Write clearly and make your figures so distinguishable that no doubt can arise. These things are little, maybe, but it is the small things in life that go to make up the sum total of big things. Don't imagine it would not be worth while to put in a little time o'nights at home with a copy-book. Other men—now big men in your business,—have done it. They consider those nights some of the best spent in their lives. Don't forget that nothing is ever really wasted.

HINTS FOR GROCERS.

To clean nickel fixtures, mix ammonia with a little whiting, rub thoroughly, and then polish with a soft rag.

Salt fish should be kept well covered with brine; if that is not done they will become rusty and dry.

When washing plate glass use a little ammonia in the water—it will cut the dirt.

Buying soap at wholesale, the merchant can afford to use it liberally. It will pay him.

The best way to clean palms is to use warm milk. A quart will go a long way.

To preserve its strength and flavor, the lids on the coffee tins should be kept tightly closed.

An apple or juicy vegetable, if placed in the box with plug tobacco, will keep it moist.

Delivery boxes should not be placed on the counter. Nails are liable to destroy its surface.

Think---Then Act!

Just think what it means to you to handle a line that is so well advertised in the newspapers and on the billboards as

TILLSON'S Pan-Dried OATS

Then act promptly and send along your order for a liberal supply of "Tillson's." This famous breakfast cereal is nourishing, palatable and easily digested, and is the product solely of the finest Oats in the World—Selected Canadian Oats.

How To Secure Success Insurance —In the Grocery Business.

EVERY merchant in Canada would take out a policy that assured permanent commercial success. Varying market conditions—bad times—periods of money stringency and their attendant results would be all wiped off the slate. But, Mr. Grocer! there is one sure way of making commercial success an absolute certainty. Secure the right kind of Reputation—by stocking high grade, first quality goods. So conduct your business that the particular women of your town will call your store "The Pure Food Shop." Get the right kind of Reputation and your success as a merchant is absolutely assured.

Take biscuits for instance. You should stock Christie Biscuits because they are the best.

That's no mere advertising statement but a definite commercial fact.

Fastidious women know that the name "Christie" is an absolute surety of biscuit purity and perfection.

They insist on Christie biscuits. If they cannot get them at your store they'll go to your competitors.

And you can bank on it they will buy more than biscuits.

Let's tell you why Christie biscuits are the best.

Every ingredient entering our "bakes" must be high grade table quality.

Biscuits cannot be better than the dough from which they are made.

We only use a special blend of the best flours milled—sift and test the blend by actual baking.

Lard, butter and eggs must be high standard—nothing less could maintain the Christie reputation.

Our factory is the biggest and cleanest in all Canada.

Hundreds of discerning women visit it every year and carry a story of cleanliness, quality and scientific baking in every city, town and village in the Dominion.

They repeat that story to their friends—they see the same story told again and again, in our wide general advertising, and the goods prove that story true, every word of it.

That's why the name "Christie" is a household word from coast to coast—why people who want the best insist on Christie biscuits—why grocers, chary of their reputation, do not care to carry other lines.

Every one of our 300 varieties must come up to our high standards—every batch of biscuits we bake from our famous Zephyr Cream Sodas to our latest new fancy line "Zoo Biscuits" must uphold or better Christie reputation.

We attribute our success to four things:—
Lengthy experience,
Business ideals,
The enthusiasm of our employees to excel
And—the concentration of our energies in making of biscuits.

Christie Biscuits Sell More Than Biscuits.

Improved Trade in Imported Goods

Milder Weather is Partly Responsible—Florida Celery is Taking Place of California Article—Markets Well Adorned With Southern Appetizers—Strawberries Still Remain High in Price—Demand for Good Quality Apples Improves.

The milder weather which has been ruling of late has had some effect in stimulating trade in fruits and vegetables. Quantities of imported goods are being brought to Canadian markets including lettuce, celery, tomatoes, strawberries, carrots, beets, radish and spinach. The shipment of California celery has fallen off, but quantities of the Florida article are being brought in. There is an increase in the arrival of bananas and dealers are looking for this line to take on some new life as the weather gets warmer and the danger of the fruit being frostbitten disappears.

The demand for apples shows improvement in some centres and $8 per barrel is being asked for first quality on the Montreal market. A report from the English market says that a great many apples are arriving there in a frosted condition. It continues "only the best fruit is wanted as dealers have lost heavily on previous shipments, and are afraid to touch apples except in small quantities."

MONTREAL.

Green Fruits.—Strawberries brought from 50 to 60 cents a box during the early part of the week, owing to the short supplies. The demand is not heavy and only a limited enquiry is yet felt. Apples are in good demand, but at high prices especially for those of the choicest quality. Trade in oranges is good and lemons are also moving satisfactorily. On the whole, however, business is running along well-defined lines. New pines are expected this week. Prices are being well maintained.

Vegetables.—Potatoes are a little easier this week on account of increased supplies. New tomatoes are also a little more plentiful. Vegetables are inclined to be slow. There is a fair call for lettuce, cucumbers, cabbage, etc., but at this season one week's trade is about the same as that immediately preceding it. The time is not far distant now, however, when business will broaden.

Green Fruits.—The trade in green fruits remains about the same, with the principal lines enjoying a normal trade. Some fine quality Florida tomatoes are arriving on the market and are quoted at $4.50 to $5 per case. They are selling fairly well. Oranges continue to go out freely, with a big demand for navels, in which there is a slightly easier feeling noticeable. Supplies of marmalade oranges are gradually being taken up. Prices show no change.

Vegetables.—The local market is well decorated with imported goods just now, there being a splendid array of celery, lettuce, new carrots, beets, spinach and similar articles, which tempt the appetite at this season of the year. There is a strengthening market in Canadian carrots and some firms are now quoting these at 60c per bag. There have been some arrivals of Canadian onion on this market lately and they are more plentiful at prices ranging from $1.75 to $2 per bag. The arrivals of Florida products such as celery, lettuce, tomatoes and strawberries are quite heavy.

THE ORIGIN OF FINNAN HADDIE.

Something About Manner of Production of Well-known Fish.

"What are smoked finnan haddies, anyway ?"

Such was a question an Ontario grocer asked a prominent fish dealer recently and is referred to, simply to bear out the statement that the trade as a whole are not sufficiently well acquainted with the ordinary classes of fish that are most easily handled. The answer to that question is simply that a finnan haddie is nothing more than a fresh haddock cured and smoked. As the name implies it is a haddock and in the cured form is one of the popular lines in general demand.

Continuing, this dealer stated that in regard to other fish carried the grocer should make himself familiar with them as regards where they are caught, how they are treated and something in re-not necessary to know these things to sell fish at this season but as with every other article carried the best results are obtained when the retailer has the knowledge that enables him to "talk" goods intelligently and thereby increases his salesmanship ability.

It is at this stage of the development of the Canadian fish business that the co-operation of the retailer is bound to count for the most. Those interests which are preparing the fish for the market are making rapid advances in their methods. They feel that the Canadian market has not been fully covered and that there is still much room for new business. It is held that proper advantage is not being taken of the wealth of fish that is right at our doors and in order to keep plentiful their supplies they are adopting new ideas and have made big strides in confining trade to Canadian fish.

Handling fish at this season should appeal to the grocer who is looking out for new fields providing good profits. Even the government has aided the fish industry by the payment of the heavy express charges on the fresh fish shipped direct from the coast to the inland points in Ontario and Quebec, the object being to enable the Canadian fishermen to compete with those of the United States in the long haul.

The imports of fish from the United States in 1906 amounted to 1,968,572 lbs. and in 1908 to 1,180,543 lbs. In 1909 they totalled 800,000 lbs. This decrease is largely attributed to the assistance the government has given. This aid has now been given for two years.

Finnan or Findon Haddie is so named after the little fishing village of Findon, near Aberdeen, Scotland, where haddock smoking first attained perfection. They are simply smoked haddock and their keeping qualities are very limited. They are smoked in houses with various materials, wood of different kinds, oak and walnut wood being the best. Sawdust and corncobs are also used but not very extensively. Maple wood is considered to give a good flavor, the secret of the business consisting in exercising judgment in order that the fish may be smoked exactly to the right degree. Sometimes finnan haddie are prepared without the use of smoke, by dipping in acetic acid and water and then hung up to dry.

E. J. Campeau, general merchant, Alexandria, Ont., has offered to compromise.

Lenten Trade in Fish Starts Off Well

Weather Conditions Have Been Quite Favorable to Fish Dealers—Salt and Pickled Fish are Scarce—Good Trade in Frozen Fish—Finnan Haddie is Slightly Firmer—Trade Will Reach a High Figure—Oyster Trade Reported Only Fair.

Thanks to the weather man there has been nothing to mar the Lenten demand for fish. Business secured a good start with cold weather preceding the first week, and although there was a prediction of a soft spell it did not materialize. This weather is just what those who are engaged in the fish business are looking for, and are sincerely hoping will be maintained while the demand obtains.

The reason is not remote. Salt and pickled fish are scarce and of necessity it was natural that frozen fish be brought in to meet the demand. This is practically what has been done and the success with which frozen fish can be handled depends very largely on cold weather. Thus, with a continuance of winter a little longer and with plentiful supplies of fresh frozen fish the total amount of business is bound to reach a big figure.

This week there is not much change in general conditions. Fillets are scarce and the demand much greater than the supply.

The market is practically exhausted of salt and pickled fish, which, as already reported, will probably be scarce throughout the rest of the season. Pickled herrings of inferior quality are now picked up here and there and sold at prices which formerly ruled for the very best quality.

The finnan haddie market is somewhat firmer, and supplies of fresh cured stock are scarce, although there is an ample supply of frozen haddies. Frozen smelts, like haddock, are rather plentiful, thanks to the abundant supplies secured during the fishing season on the Atlantic coast. The market has felt the effects of that plethora and there has been more or less of a sag in prices. Frozen mackerel are still in good supply and the demand is good.

Fresh lobsters are scarce and the oyster trade is reported only fair. Fresh fish, expected from the cost this week, will not arrive in large quantities on account of drifting ice which is moving on the fishing grounds, thus preventing operations. The fresh fish market is therefore slightly firmer.

QUEBEC.

Monteeal.—Salted and pickled fish are dearer in some lines and fresh frozen seems to be temporarily firm. The various dealers report good business and are hoping that the weather will not break for a few weeks yet. Frozen fish is moving particulatly well and trade on the whole is very satisfactory.

ONTARIO.

Toronto.—Trade in fish is keeping at a high level, although the mild weather has had some effect, making retailers more careful about ordering, with the result that fish are being bought in smaller quantities than usual. Fresh frozen fish enjoy a good portion of the trade. One firm, on account of the mildness of the weather, is offering fish at reduced prices, such as gold eyes, 4; halibut, 6½; pike, 3; white fish, 5; pickerel, 7; flounders, 3; qualla salmon, 7; cohoes, 9½. However, it was stated by one dealer that there are no more first-class fish in storage here than will meet the demand during the Lenten season. The oyster trade is also being affected to a certain extent by the mild weather, but good cool weather would greatly enliven trade.

NOVA SCOTIA.

Halifax.—The Lenten season opened on Wednesday, and there was a big demand for fish. Some improvement is apparent in the receipts in the local market, more cod and haddock arriving and also some halibut. Prices of the latter fish have eased off from 18 to 15 cents per pound retail. At the higher price dealers found that the consumer did not purchase readily.

The local market was bare of lobsters, practically the whole week, something unusual for the season of the year. There is a general shortage all round, both Boston and New York reporting lobster famines, and as a result prices are at record figures. There has been a heavy falling off of shipments from Nova Scotia ports to Boston.

All fish dealers report business brisk and the various plants running full time to keep up with the orders.

According to advices received here from Gloucester, there is a marked improvement in the receipts of fresh fish. Two vessels arrived during the week each with 90,000 pounds of cod and haddock, and one had 3,000 pounds of halibut, and the other had 5,000 pounds of halibut. The captains of both vessels reported fish plentiful. The haddock sold for $3.25 and the cod at $5.50 per hundred pounds.

BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Vancouver, March 9.—Business is good in the fish market, though there is little out of the ordinery to report. The demand is strong, with Lent starting, so that it should be well maintained during the month. The weather is improving now and halibut should be brought in in larger quantities.

An unusually large shipment of salt herring was made to the Orient by the Blue Funnel liner Oanfa this week. The fish was from British Columbia, though it was loaded at Tacoma. The Capilano took down 275 tons, the Selkirk 160 tons, the Celtic 350 tons, the Clansman 150 tons, while the Ophir took down a large shipment.

Tons of fresh herrings are being received at New Westminster from Prince Rupert, the failure of the herring run at Nanaimo and other points having driven the fishermen to the Northern waters.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

St. Johns.—The Lenten season opened last week with conditions anything but satisfactory. Fish of all kinds are scarce and high and the supply does not by any means equal the demand. Fresh fish are coming in slowly with just about enough to keep the market going. The fishermen are hoping for milder weather, when they will be able to get out more frequently. The situation will be relieved somewhat in consequence. A quantity of Newfoundland herring, both salt and frozen, is offering, and the quality is said to be good. Haddock is quoted at 4 cents and cod at 3½ cents per pound. Frozen halibut is 10 to 15 cents.

Mr. Grocer--Did you ever stop to think what would happen if your supplies of our brands ran short and you were not able to meet the Lenten demand?

"I'll wire at once, Madam. I'm sorry I had only a few in stock" will not be a satisfactory apology as every live housewife knows that you should have a full line of those brands which appeal to the popular taste.

As regards dry fish, a local fish merchant who has been in business forty-five years, reports that never in his experience had the prices been so high. Medium dry cod is worth at present, $6.50 per quintal, and small fish are held at $4 to $4.25. The record price previously was $5.50 and they have sold as low as $2.50. Under ordinary circumstances dry pollock sells for $1.50 to $2.75 per quintal, but the price now is $4.50. Grand Manan herring are selling at $5.25 per barrel and $2.75 per half barrel. Pickled shad are worth $8 to $11 per half barrel. Bloaters are 85 to 90 cents per box and kippered herring are 30 cents per dozen.

NEWFOUNDLAND.

St. John's, Nfd., Mar. 8.—Prices on this market are unchanged, with the exception of salmon, which as forecasted by The Canadian Grocer some time ago, has advanced in price. Quotations at the present are $6.50 per case, with some houses asking as high as $7, and even higher prices are looked for. This is the highest figure that salmon has ever reached here, rarely ever rising above $5 per case, while the time is recalled when considerable difficulty was experienced in disposing of it at $4.50 per case. Several cargoes of fish have been shipped to foreign markets from this port, and it looks as if stock left in the warehouses will be smaller than for several years.

KILLING THE GROCERY MOTH.

Dear Editor,—For some time I have been going to write you, to see if you or some of the readers of your valuable journal could through the columns of your paper, enlighten me how to rid a grocery store of moths. No doubt nearly every grocer is troubled more or less by this pest. For the past five years I have been making enquiries from every one I thought might know, but so far have been unsuccessful in finding a cure.

SUBSCRIBER.

Editor's Note.—Apparently this pesky little moth has been very active in the country this year, for complaints of similar nature to that given above have come to The Grocer from many widely separated points.

A few days ago when Dr. Hastings, medical health officer of Toronto, was asked the best means of getting rid of moths, grubs, and other insect life lodging among foodstuffs, he recommended the use of the insect powder "Tyreathrum."

This, he said, was the best preparation he could advise for such purposes, but he suggested, also, that anyone wishing to rid a store of such little pests would have to exercise the eternal vigilance of the housewife who would drive out the ordinary house-fly from her dwelling.

Fish Set Down in Winnipeg Two Days After Being Taken From the Pacific—New Combination Berry Being Cultivated Down in Illinois—The Co-operative Store Idea Spreads—Increase of Grain Area in Russia.

The total average of grain in Russia in 1910 aggregated 240,419,396 acres, an increase of 6,959,922 acres over 1909.

A new berry is being grown in Logan county, Ill., which it is said bids fair to revolutionize the berry industry in that state. The new production is called the Yankee Prince raspberry-strawberry, and, as its name indicates, is a cross between a raspberry and a strawberry. It resembles the raspberry in surface but has the shape and size of the strawberry. The plants begin to bear about the same time as the strawberry and continue to bear fruit until late in the fall.

Captain C. H. Nicholson, manager of the Grand Trunk Pacific steamships on the Pacific coast is authority for the statement that when the road through the mountains is completed, it will be possible to get fish into the prairie provinces as far east as Winnipeg within forty-eight hours after they are taken from the sea.

The total imports of salmon to Great Britain in 1910 amounted to 1,428,479 cases which, with the exception of 1902, is the largest importation in the history of the salmon trade. Of late there has been a growing demand for ½ lb. flats and packers who import to that country are turning more to that size.

Reports tell of two new departures, marking the spread of the co-operative store idea in the United States chiefly in the New York district. The Amsterdam Grocery Company, with a capital of $25,000, and a warehouse in New York, has already begun business. It is composed of retail grocers who have been forced to get together to save themselves from the department and chain store competition. Members call for their own supplies and a salaried manager is employed as buyer. Another example is accorded in the organization of the United Grocers' Company, with a capital of half a million dollars. It is reported that 150 dealers have already enlisted under the banner of this company, but that the names of one hundred more are wanted before it is proposed to commence operations.

The Montreal Packing Company, Limited, has been formed in Montreal with a capital stock of $50,000.

The Retail Merchants' Association of Nova Scotia have planned a trip to Europe. The start will be made early in March and the entire program will occupy five weeks' time. Experts will be in charge to point out the places of interest to the business man of the Maritime Provinces.

Victoria, B.C., March 8.—The annual meeting of the Victoria Retail Grocers' Exchange was held recently, and the following officers elected for this year: E. J. Wall, president; H. Schroeder, vice-president; B. W. Hall, treasurer; A. Thornton, A. Tait and W. C. Patterson, directors, and T. G. Futcher, secretary. Reports presented showed that the past year has been a successful one for the association. Associations have also been organized at Kamloops, Revelstoke, Nelson and Cranbrook on the mainland; one for the islands adjacent to Victoria, as well as at Nanaimo, Duncans and Cumberland. All these associations are affiliated with the Provincial Association of Retail Merchants of British Columbia.

A Montreal grocer was recently fined $30 for refilling labeled gin bottles of another firm with a compound of his own, and sealing them with green wax somewhat similar to that used by the other firm.

Spices, and How to Know Them

By W. M. GIBBS

The only book on the subject—just published. The merchant or salesman; who knows all about spices, can command the spice trade in his territory. To get this information, he should read this work, dealing with PREPARATION, USE and ADULTERATION OF SPICES—a chapter devoted to each spice.

"The Canadian Grocer Is the Best Edited Grocery Trade Paper in North America."

These are not our words but the words of one of the largest manufacturers of foodstuffs in the United States. For the past year he has advertised in The Grocer and last week when renewing his order he made the above observation. As he has been advertising through the trade press of both Canada and the United States, he had occasion to study closely the merits of all the trade papers. And the above is his verdict.

No trade paper is valuable unless it is read and The Canadian Grocer is not only read, but studied by the most progressive dealers in all parts of the Dominion of Canada—because it has quality in its editorial and advertising columns.

Robinson's Patent Barley

As a healthful, nourishing and enjoyable food for young and old, Robinson's Patent Barley is unequalled. Druggists sell it; grocers can sell much more of it—It is a food and right in their line. Those who are wise will always sell it.

"Just as Good" Means Absolutely Not as Good!

You can pay a competitor no greater compliment than by comparing the worth of your goods with his, and likewise you can offer a woman no greater insult than by confronting her with something "Just as good" when she knows exactly what she wants and has come to your store to get it.

Let us not go back to the dark ages of Trade Deceit, friend, but rather let us keep on the sunny side of a woman's good-will. It pays to give a customer exactly what is asked for and with no cross looks. "Just as Good" means absolutely not so good and the whole world knows it!

Give them what they ask for!

The "Thistle" Brand of Fish. Frequently the ever-increasing demand for Haddies, Kippered Herring and Herring in Tomato Sauce, packed under the "Thistle" label, exceeds our ability to supply all. This is an eloquent tribute to quality, friends!

Macaroni made by P. Codou As tender as a baby's skin—clean as the proverbial whistle. Likewise could we honestly describe the vermicelli and fancy pastes that come from that famous maker "Codou."

THE KEITH SYSTEM

Has Been Tried by Actual Store Fires!!!

Cut of 100 book size, showing hood locked to cabinet.

We don't guess about this system being fire-proof, but we know. We have several affidavits on file from merchants who had fires destroying buildings and stocks of goods, and whose accounts were all saved through the KEITH SYSTEM.

In case of fire wouldn't it be a satisfaction if you had a KEITH SYSTEM and knew your records would be saved ?

The Time to Lock the Door is Before the Thief Breaks In.

When you buy a KEITH you not only lock the door and bar it against fire, but also against the bugbear of posting accounts on the one hand, and of mixing accounts, bringing forward wrong past accounts, losing slips, and the manipulation of charges on the other hand.

It is the right system for you at the right price.

Let us send you full information at once without putting you under any obligations to buy.

A Great Convenience to Housewives

ARE YOU SELLING

SIMCOE BRAND Shredded Pineapple?

It is a most convenient form to use this luscious and healthful fruit, and you will find it sells very readily once its virtues become known.

Only the choicest selected Bahama Pines are treated in our modern sanitary factory, and the canning is done with the greatest care, the best granulated sugar only being used.

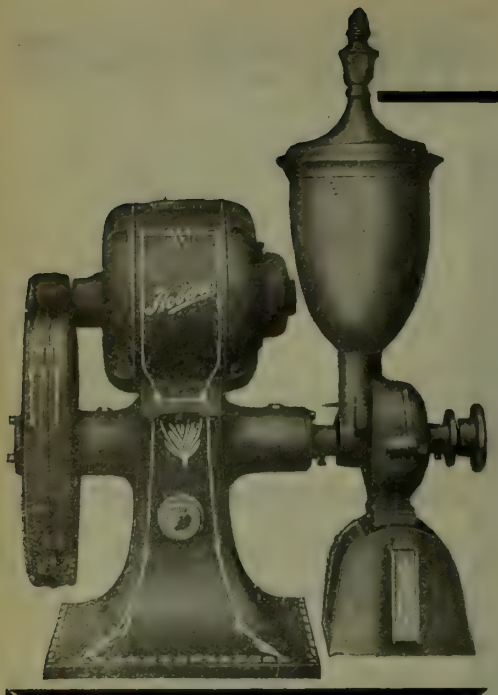
A couple of popular recipes for using Simcoe Pineapple are appended below, and we shall be glad to send any grocer others on request.

PINEAPPLE AND PEACH GLACES

Drain the liquor from a can of Simcoe Peaches. Chop fine and empty into a dish with a can of Simcoe Shredded Pineapple. Cover with a cup of granulated sugar. Stand for an hour, and pour over them the liquor drained from the fruits and enough water to make a full pint-and-a-half of liquid. If not sweet enough, add sugar. Stir in the juice of a lemon, and the unbeaten white of an egg, and freeze.

Put up in 2's tins.

Try a few cases of Simcoe Pineapple.



Tell your customers how good it is, how to use it, and watch it sell. Your wholesaler has a special price for you on this article.

PINEAPPLE PIE

Empty a can of Simcoe Grated Pineapple into dish. Beat the yolks of two eggs, add to them a teaspoonful of butter rubbed smooth with a cup of sugar, stir in a cup of milk and beat in the grated pineapple. Pour immediately into an open crust and bake in a moderate oven. When done, spread with meringue made by beating the white of an egg stiff with a tablespoonful of powdered sugar. Return to the oven long enough to brown lightly.

Does Advertising Help You Any?

As between two brands of the same product, one advertised to consumers, and the other not, can't you practically always sell the advertised one easier?

Apply your answer to our Dromedary Dates, which are and have been advertised to your customers in all the leading magazines, as compared with ordinary bulk dates. Is there any comparison as to their comparative salability?

And we haven't mentioned one very important fact—their relative attractiveness. Dromedary Dates, selected fruit, clean and moist in a tight carton; and bulk dates, exposed to the dust and sold from a broken and crumbling bundle.

The carton means a good deal more in dates than it means in most other things.

We also pack ROYAL EXCELSIOR and ANCHOR BRAND package dates.

Prospect of the Canned Goods Market

Some Pertinent Facts Relating to the Passing of the Fruit Shelves in Many Homes—The Sanitary Canneries—The Outlook for Prices During Coming Season, and Condition of Stocks Held—Care of Goods.

In days gone by, and yet not so remote, one of the outstanding characteristics of the "home" was the array of preserves on the fruit shelves in pantry or cellar. The quantity varied with the powers of purchase, but it was the endeavor of all good housewives to have, the quality par excellence, no matter what the quantity. No servant's hand, no matter how clean or capable, could perform the operations mysterious, and, to the small boy, ever wonderful, through which the fruit was compelled to pass before being carefully sealed away in the glass "sealers," and tins.

The face of the housewife on "preserving day" was fretted with many an anxious frown, and great were the worries consequent upon the attendance of the seething kettles. But it was one of her glories and her joys, and an annual occasion when the good man of the house, on his coming in the evening would survey with open approval the fruit as it gleamed in its produced juices through the fragile transparent containers. Upon the "keeping" of that day's work through till the early days of spring, when it would be the only supply to draw from in the absence of the raw products, the housewife, as such, rose or fell in the estimates of the neighbors, and even of the members of her family.

The Good Old Days.

But that was in the good old days, for now the tempting array of preserves of all descriptions is a sight that does not often greet the eye, in the cities and towns of this Canada of ours. Gone, alas, or rapidly going, is one of the characteristics of our home life, and soon the ways of our mothers in the preservation of fruit will be known no more in the land.

The reason is not far to seek. In "ye olden days" when the "rite" of preserving was, as has already been stated, an operation mysterious in the household, practically all of the "clean preserving" was done in the home. If anyone were so thoughtless as to suggest canned goods in place of the real thing he would perforce be silenced by exclamations of horror from most of the other inmates of the house. But those days have gone. Now, practically everything that goes on to the table is made in the one-time despised factory. The meats, the fruits, the vegetables, the soups, everything you can think about, are prepared for the table by purely mechanical processes. The dislike and opposition of the housewife was slow to yield and, in some cases, in fact, it has not given way as yet, but in the great majority of cases the canned preserves of the factories throughout the country are accepted along with the canned vegetables and meats, and preserving day is now little more than a memory. The saving in nerves, money, and time has come to be appreciated. So it is that the canners of the country are able to speak of the sale of about half a million cans of goods of all classes a year, and of the hope that the figure will reach a million in the near future. The housewife has capitulated to science.

'Twixt and Between Seasons.

That time of which mention was made early in this article—the 'twixt and between season, when the raw fruits and vegetables were either off the market, or quoted at such fancy prices that the average woman feels unable to buy—has now arrived. The dealer is on the threshold of a demand that is not new, but is ever-widening.

Spring is, true to its name, the season of promise, and if originality and energy are but properly applied in the pushing of canned goods, he should have the promise fully ripened into the golden harvest by the summer time. This is particularly true of the west, for while the business of the dealer in the east may be expected to increase, that of the merchant of the prairies, will go ahead by leaps and bounds. The westerner is almost entirely dependent upon the product of the canneries for his supplies and it is up to the dealer to make the most of the opportunity so presented to him.

In the east the dealer will have done much if he convince the housewife that it is almost an utter waste of time and worry on her part to waste another session of "preserving." If he can get close enough with his window display to touch the responsive chords. If he can prove to the housewife that Johnny's fingers would smear just as delightfuly after a dip in Blank's jam as her own, he will have done all that is necessary. She wants to be convinced really, and she would silently thank anyone who could prove to her satisfaction that mechanical processes are quite as sanitary and good as her own recipes. It would rest with her to satisfy the rest of the household. But she has to be shown. You, Mr. Dealer, will have to keep eternally at it. That is, you will if you want to do anything with such material. It is as sure as fate that the demand will grow.

Canned Goods Firm.

There is a pronunced firmness in nearly all lines of canned goods, now, and further advances are looked for in some quarters as the season comes in. One of these lines is tomatoes. The crop last year showed, it is claimed, practically no decrease from that of last year, but the demand increased to such an extent that prices have gone steadily upward with, it is stated by many, a bright posibility that those levels may be maintained. The west has already taken a large part of the past season's output and the canners are now said to be stripped of their stocks. What goods still to be had are in the hands of the wholesalers, and it is aserted that even their stocks are running short and that they have been buying of one another, while some imports have been made from United States markets. A Toronto canned goods broker recently said: "The shortage in canned tomatoes is becoming more apparent every day. With six months' trade ahead, visible stocks are not large enough to last three months with the usual business passing. But conditions are bound to adjust themselves and there will likely be a decrease in consumption from now on with the present level of prices. Still tomatoes have a trade of their own, and when a customer asks for tomatoes they want them, and will not take 'something else' as in the case of peas.

Shortage in Peas.

"Not for many seasons has there been such a decrease in the output of peas as last year, when the shortage amounting to between forty and fifty per cent. There is therefore a marked scarcity in this line, but coupled with that there has been a noted decrease in consumption, on account of the high price and other lines, such as corn and beans, which are cheaper, have been substituted for them. There is a difference of opinion as to the future in peas. The scarcity, logically should point to higher values, but as retailers have nearly deserted the line at the present price, it is felt in some centres that prices may have to be reduced in order to make sales. However, crop prospects as they become known later in the season, will determine the scale of prices to a certain extent.

"Corn, so plentiful last year, and of which packers delivered fully 98 per cent. of contract, is also shortening in supply. On account of the high prices of other mentioned lines there has been a brisk demand, and it has gone out so freely that wholesalers in some centres are already buying among themselves to replenish stocks. Conditions would seem to indicate a steadiness, if not higher prices.

"With stocks of vegetables so short, the situation may be acute before summer, with the result that wholesalers' stocks and retailers' shelves should be nearly gone when the new crop comes in. There will have to be a big crop this year in order to supply the demand with stocks so low."

Salmon Strong Too.

Salmon is another line in which dealers expect a strengthening of price. The salmon packs runs in cycles of four years, there being three "lean" and one "fat" year. The season of 1909 was a "fat," and the output of salmon in British Columbia was 967,920 cases, while 1910 was a "lean" year with an output of 762,201 cases. This also is rated as a "lean" year, and with consumption increasing, prices will probably strengthen as the season advances. The opening prices on lobsters are also higher than last year.

Quality rather than price should be the key note of the argument in selling. The greatest drawback in sales has been a feeling of uncertainty on the part of consumers regarding the quality of the goods, and the aim should be to overcome this feeling. In order to do this you must sell only canned goods of quality so that once customers have

Seasonable Stocks Sell Best When Seen

Methods Adopted by a Few Progressive Grocers to Push Sale of Canned Goods—The Value of Keeping Them Always in Plain View of Customers—A Simple Window Arrangement.

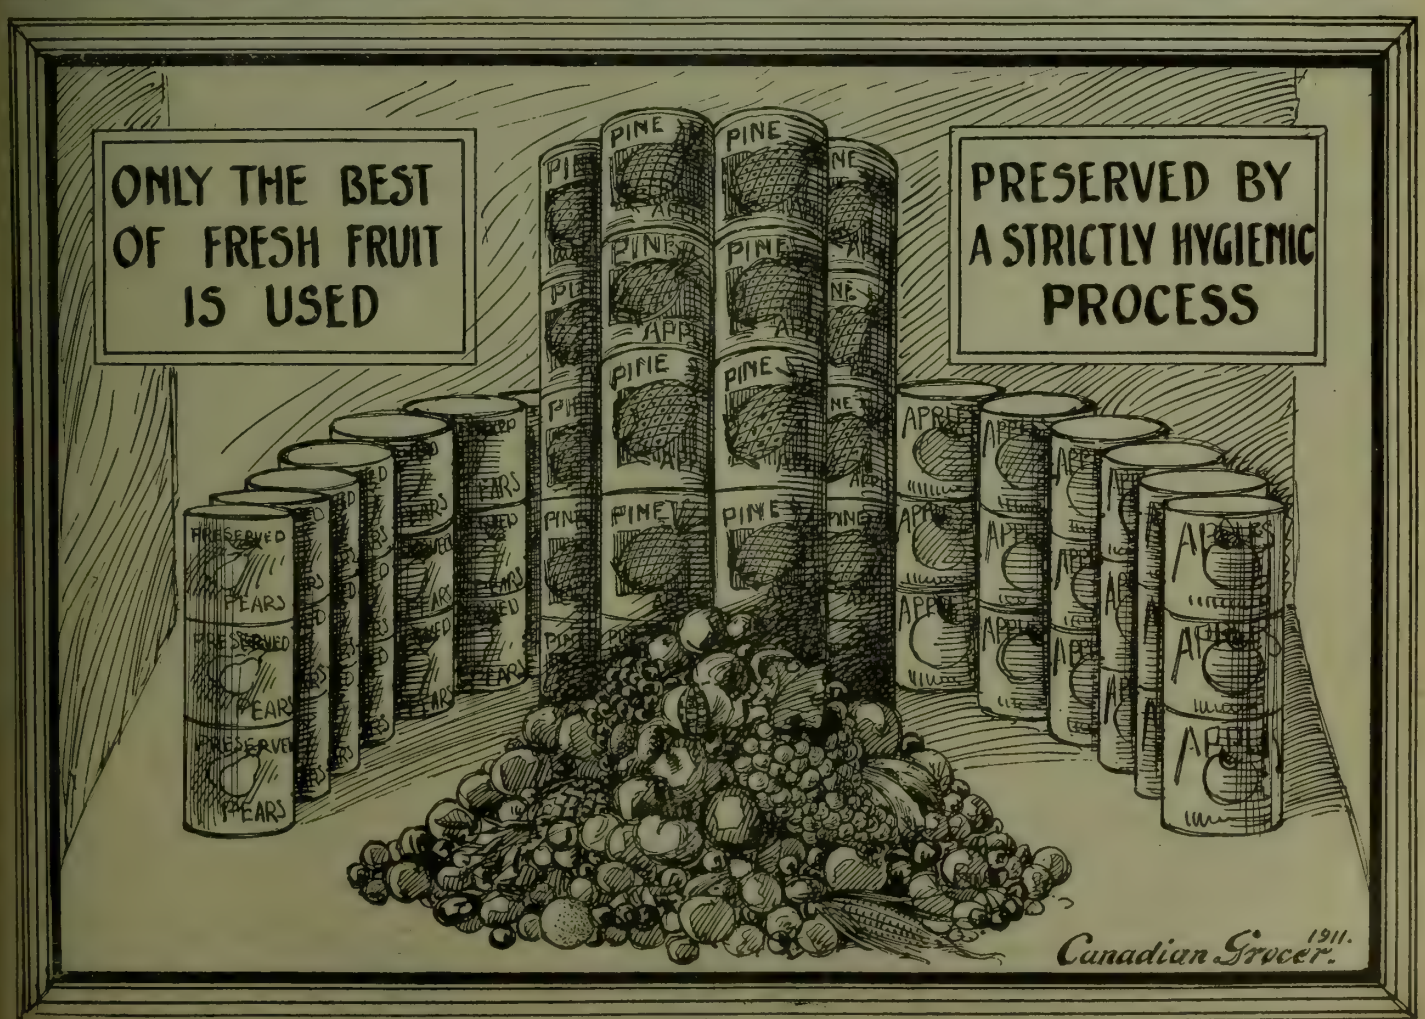
"Some good people have informed me lately in a manner suggesting the last word on the subject, that the arrangement of a stock of canned goods has no bearing upon its sale" remarked E. C. Matthews, a Toronto retailer, recently. "I insist, on the contrary," he continued, "that it has. Of course it is not the most difficult thing in the world to sell canned goods at this time of the year. It is, on the contrary, quite a simple matter, because the people want them. Still there are a great number who would leave my store without ordering, I feel sure, did I not adopt some method of attracting their attention to these lines.

Plan He Follows.

"The plan I generally follow is this: take this season of the year, when the domestic pantries and fruit shelves are generally depleted of their wholesome dainties, I keep canned fruits to the fore. Up on the shelves, near the door I arrange them so that the glances of the customer just naturally fall upon them as they come up to the counter. When I notice their attention has been attracted. I mention the fact that in most homes the domestic preparations are almost gone and mention, incidentally, some of the good points about those canned fruits. So it is with other lines. I KEEP THE SHELVES ALIVE. When the season of one particular class of goods that I have been featuring on the shelves, goes out, the goods go, also, to a less conspicuous position, and their place is taken by more seasonable products.

"They may argue till they're black in the face along the lines that the arrangement of goods has no effect whatever upon the sale of canned goods, but the success I have had as a result of my own system has convinced me quite to the contrary. Very few cans would be sold if they were hidden away at the back of the store. There is no doubt in my mind on that point," concluded Mr. Matthews.

Show the Goods.



A New Brunswick merchant argues that while a good label will help in the sale of canned goods, greater results are obtained by showing the goods. He recently had a window display bearing out this idea which sold quite a lot of goods

It was arranged as follows: In the background was built three T's of canned tomatoes with the one in the centre larger than the other two. In front of each of these was a pyramid of tomatoes which just reached up to the cross on the "T," hiding the lower part, so that when viewing the display, the cross on the T's looked as if suspended in the air. At the front of the window, in the middle of the display, a small stand was placed and covered with a white linen cloth. On the top of this was placed a fancy dish filled with the contents of a can of tomatoes, which had been carefully emptied so at to show the tomatoes as solid as possible. At the side of the dish was placed a silver spoon and close by was the opened can. A big show card on the top of the centre T, bore the words: "A mighty appetizing side dish to any meal—and always ready to serve."

On each side of the dish of tomatoes was a card bearing the words "Quality tomatoes at 15 cents."

Another Window.

The accompanying cut supplies another idea for a suitable, and "catchy" window. There is nothing difficult about this window scheme, and yet it preaches the sermon that is needed. It tells of the presence of a supply of good canned goods on the shelves of the store within, and it also suggests to the passerby, as nothing else would, that canners are really becoming particular as to the quality of the fruit that goes into their preparations. The pyramid of raw fruits can be varied to suit the individual need. Practically all of those shown, however, can now be obtained, and it would pay some enterprising merchants contemplating the use of such a display to secure them, even at the sacrifice of a little time and trouble.

In the sale of these goods, display is an important feature. They should be kept as much before the customers as possible. If there is no suitable shelf space available, it may be there are a few pillars in the store that could be built around with cans. In many establishments, however, there is a space at the top of the shelving making an excellent place to display goods. The view in many cases suggests the purchase.

Pelee Island's Broom Corn Possibilities

Success Which Has Attended the Planting of Product in Lake Erie Peninsula During the Last Two or Three Seasons—Method of Cultivation Explained—Values Realized for Crop of Last Year.

By David Williams.

The growing of broom corn in the southern peninsula of Ontario promises to become an important industry in the not distant future. The soil and climate of that district are both well suited to its successful culture and there appears no reason why it should not produce a large part of the corn, now almost entirely imported from the United States.

On Pelee Island in Lake Erie, the corn has been grown with fair success during the last two or three seasons, the abnormally high prices of past years having stimulated its cultivation. Last season the crop taken off several acres was placed upon the market with fair results, the quality of the corn being very good.

Method of Cultivation.

The method of cultivation is quite simple, and is much the same as with Indian corn. The seed is sown in rows about 30 inches apart and the ground between the rows cultivated similarly to corn, to keep down the weeds until the crop obtains a sufficient height to take care of itself.

When the corn attains to a certain growth, it is all gone through, and each plant bent over by hand to keep the broom from spreading out as it is necessary that the fibres should grow as closely together as possible. When the crop has obtained maturity, it is cut by hand and sorted, the top, or broom corn, being separted from the rest of the plant while the balance is cured for fodder either in ensilage or otherwise. It is said to be excellent food for cattle.

Must be Planted Early.

In the South-western States where large quantities of broom corn are grown, the planting is done quite late in the season, about July; but in Southern Ontario it is necessary, in order to escape the early frosts in the fall, to have it planted by the 15th of May.

On Pelee Island, the crop is about one-third of a ton per acre and, at the prices realized last season; $180 to $200 per ton, was quite profitable This season, however, owing to a larger production, the price is lower, but even at the reduced figure, it pays well when the fodder part of the crop is considered. It will also, no doubt, give better results when cultivation becomes more general and machinery for harvesting similar to that used in the United States is introduced.

The manufacture of broom corn into brooms, brushes, and whisks in Canada is quite an extensive industry, and the Canadian market for these articles is pretty well taken care of by the domestic factories. The broom corn, the chief raw material entering into its making is imported into Canada free of duty, but the industry has to contend, it is claimed, with some conditions that might easily be remedied by proper legislation. One of these disadvantages is said to lie in the high duty charged upon broom-making machines. For instance, a broom-sewing machine costs in the United States, where they are made, about $500. When the duty of 30 per cent, is added it brings the price to $650, which is a heavy tax upon the manufacturer.

So far as known no broom-making machines are manufactured in Canada, the given reason being that the number issued is too small to warrant any one undertaking the build[illegible] them in this country.

This is where our legislators might, with a little attention and effort, render valuable assistance to a thriving and useful industry, while at the same time add no additional burden to the community.

AN APPRECIATION FROM THE FAR NORTH.

The Canadian Grocer:

Enclosed please find postal note for six dollars ($6.00) covering enclosed invoice.

If there is any grocer or grocery clerk in all of Canada that does not take "The Grocer" there is something wrong with his "make-up."

In my opinion "The Grocer" is as essential to the grocer and his clerk as a pair of scales or a cash register. "A live grocer cannot make a success without all three."

NEW REPRESENTATIVE IN THE WEST.

David Williams has been appointed general representative of the MacLean Publishing Company in Manitoba and Saskatchewan, and he is now en route for his new field. He will visit every village, town and city of Manitoba and Saskatchewan, so that the merchants of these provinces can look forward to meeting him soon. Mr. Williams has had a wide business experience, having owned and managed a large woolen mill in Collingwood, Ont., for some time. For a number of years he has been covering Ontario and the Maritime Provinces in the interests of the thirteen MacLean publications, and his practical knowledge of industrial conditions in Eastern Canada will enable him to offer some very helpful suggestions to the business men of Manitoba and Saskatchewan.

DAVID WILLIAMS,
Appointed General Representative of MacLean Publications in Manitoba and Saskatchewan.

POINTERS FOR WINDOW-DRESSING.

The window that sells goods, no matter how simple, is the valuable one. Do not aim to make a window merely attractive, but try to have it a selling power.

Display goods so that each article, with the price is distinct, and is seen to it's best advantage.

Arrange the display so that the customers will get a good idea of the merchandise at a passing glance. If it does not interest her at first glance she is liable to pass on.

Collect articles that bear some relation to one another. If you do not, the effect of your window is lost.

Make your display symmetrical, and evenly balanced. Many otherwise good displays have been spoiled by being out of proportion.

Show seasonable goods early in the season. Do not wait until other stores have interested customers in goods before showing yours.

Where the Hand of the Law is Heavy

Warning Sounded by Authority to Retail Merchants Who Deal in Poisons—Conditions Governing Sale of Pure Carbolic Acid —Some Instances to Show That Pharmacy Act is Being Rigidly Enforced.

By George E. Gibbard.

When will the general merchants throughout Canada become seized of the fact that it is not possible for them to sell certain poisons under the law. The profit to be derived from the sale of such drugs as pure carbolic acid are so small that one fine swallows it all up and generally a great deal more cash besides.

As a matter of fact pure carbolic acid is a poison which should be sold only on the order of a doctor, and then only by a qualified druggist, and it seems to me a pity that even pharmacists generally do not recognize this. There is no need of the pure poison being given out unless a doctor be on hand to control its use. Moreover, there is more profit to be made from the sale of a solution than from the pure product.

So I would like to sound a warning to all retailers who now are handling poisons. The law is becoming more rigidly enforced every day, and the inspectors more intense in their investigations. In this connection it will be remembered that some time ago a number of pharmacists were haled before the court in Toronto, and heavily fined because they neglected to comply with the full requirements of the Act in selling poisons.

Conditions Governing Sale.

A general merchant in Ontario, sold carbolic acid, pure, in an unlabelled bottle and in doing so violated the conditions of the Pharamacy Act which permits the sale of pure carbolic acid only by qualified pharmacists.

This poison must be put in a bottle properly labelled with the word "poison," and the name of the vendor. The sale must be recorded in a book kept for the purpose which gives the name of the purchaser, with his address, the quantity sold, the purpose for which the acid is required and the signature of the purchaser.

The provisions of the Pharmacy Act are liberal toward general dealers, in the sale of harmless drugs and household remedies, and also permits the sale of a 5 per cent. solution of carbolic acid which will answer all needs for household purposes. Pure carbolic acid should not be used in the household except on the requirement of a physician or veterinary. But, notwithstanding the liberality of the Pharmacy Act in this matter, several dealers continue to ignore its provisions and subject themselves to fines which more than counterbalance all profits whicn they may realize on illegal sales.

This Window Appeals to Montrealers

Montreal, Mar. 16.—This window of Lenten suggestions was displayed last week by the St. Lawrence Grocery, St. Lawrence Boulevard, Montreal. The arrangement was rather simple and the goods shown all appropriate and seasonable. Only three different classes of groceries were used in the window, and these came under the headings: fish, cheese and marmalade.

The varieties of cheese were, Gruyers, Canadian stilton, Roquefort, Lymbourg, and Oka. Each was marked with a price ticket and labelled as to its kind. The window therefore was more or less of a source of information to the average passerby. Two pyramids composed of tins of marmalade occupied a prominent position in the background.

The different varieties of fish were also interesting. Small kegs of Holland herrings marked at 90c. made into a little pyramid arrangement are also seen in the rear. Tins of smoked herrings, herrings in tomato sauce, sardines amieux, sardines a l'huile, clams in tins and lobster in glass containers all combine to form a window that would appeal to the most fastidious taste.

In the accompanying cut, owing to the fact that the window is flat, the arrangement is not shown to the best advantage. In the centre background is seen a large round Gruyere cheese and just in front of it a Canadian stilton. The other articles are also readily noticed. The window could easily have been made more attractive but even as it was it attracted considerable attention because of the information it afforded in the fact that on each price card the name of the article was given together with the price. Besides the goods were all of a high-grade and appealed to the public's taste. Again they were seasonable and demonstrated that an attractive window can be made of goods that have a special interest to observers of Lent.

These windows appeal to the general taste and if a window card were used inscribed "Lenten Suggestions" or something to that effect it would appeal even as a novelty. In addition the window can be changed weekly with decided effectiveness.

CUSTOM AND DISHONESTY.

Like religion, TRADE CUSTOM has been made in the past to cover a multitude of sins.

As in the language of a nation, CUSTOM frequently has made the pronunciation of some word as solidly fixed as the Rocky Mountains, so TRADE CUSTOM in the past has sufficed as an excuse for many dealers who carried on a policy of MISREPRESENTATION.

Father Time, as he swept along, eliminated many objectionable conditions from off the face of this good old earth, and one of those was "Cloaking Custom." Misrepresentation, everywhere, has now become as a shifting sand, for a dealer, and he who builds on such a foundation is but building for a fall. This is the AGE OF FACTS; people everywhere demand them. So, Mr. Dealer, see to it that the SERPENT of UNTRUTHFULNESS enters not into your business relations with your customers.

Once upon a time, a wholesaler, so the story runs, sold a manufacturer a bale of cloth that was marked "all wool," but was not. The manufacturer returned the cloth to the jobber, giving the reason and the latter sued.

When the case came up for trial several prominent manufacturers testified that great harm was being done to legitimate business by men who did not label goods for exactly what they were. The jobber pleaded TRADE CUSTOM as an excuse but the Bench this disregarded and found for the defendant manufacturer.

The moral is plain. It goes down to the fundamental of business—HONESTY. Never act so that it may be possible for anyone to place you in a position where YOUR HONESTY may be questioned. Your good name is the best asset you have. Once let the whisper of defamation get abroad in the community and a part of your business is already lost. Dishonesty does not pay.

TRADE COURAGE OF TWO MEN

Timid dealers who look askance on any proposition entailing the opening of a store in any district already reasonably well served, or where the population is limited, may well take inspiration from the energy of two men in the last west whose names are Dean and Muir.

Reports tell us that filled with dauntless hope and having an unchangeable belief in the future of the new country, these two men departed from the beaten paths of trade and have gone far out along the survey of the Alberta Central Railway to establish their place of business. They will be located 24 miles south of Brock, in Saskatchewan.

Think, just THINK, of what that word survey signifies. Here are two men who have the faith to believe that somewhere along the line of that projected railway a flourishing town or city or two may spring up. They KNOW that men will FOLLOW them in, and are taking the chance of believing they will purchase from their pioneer store the goods that they may need.

But, you may say that others may go out along that Alberta Central Survey, to locate stores in THE place where the business is going to gravitate to, and that Dean and Muir may be left out in the cold, to ultimately fail. No they won't! The SPIRIT of TRADE that induced them to go out into the trackless prairie in ADVANCE of those who will make the country blossom into prosperity will carry them far enough to settle down in the right place in the end even if they do not hit it right at the outset.

It is just the indomitable confidence of these two men that is making Western Canada great, because it exists to a more or less degree in every man west of Lake Superior. Results are bound to follow in the wake of these men because their actions are all born of hope.

It is inborn for the westerner to hope. That was what took him there, and dreams of golden hue come quickly to the man in the new land. But it is easy for the merchant in the prosperous towns and cities of Eastern Canada to dream golden dreams also, for all of this country is good enough for hope.

EDITOR'S CHAT.

In the next issue of The Canadian Grocer there will appear an article by Henry Johnson, Jr., on "Advertising for Retailers," that will be well worth the time and trouble of any of our readers to read with care. From week to week Mr. Johnson's papers have appeared in this paper, and it must be that there are many who watch for them and who derive pleasure and profit from the perusal.

And it is well so. Mr. Johnson is a grocer of twenty-eight years' experience.—years which have been crowned with success of no mean order. His talks are not based upon theories but upon the outstanding dominant facts borne in upon him in years of practical striving. He is a teacher any grocer, young or old, might well listen to, if not follow.

This week, Mr. Johnson tells about the man who would throw his dollars in the balance against the experience of a boy, and in his characteristic way he relates the better part for the man to follow.

Read it carefully, there might be something you can use.

A CUSTOM OF SOME TRAVELERS.

B. W. Ziemann, Dominion President of the Retail Merchants' Association, at the recent conference in Guelph, declared in the course of an address that it was customary for the travelers of some wholesale houses to sell the retailer and hotel and boarding house keepers of the same town.

Whether this be done as part of the regular campaign of the drummer, or simply as a means, developed on his own initiative to swell his total of commissions is not known, but the thing is being done.

The policy is unfair. It is not a square deal for a traveler to induce a retailer to stock his shelves with goods to sell, and then go to the hotels and boarding houses—the biggest customers in the town—and sell them over his head.

The Grocer ventures to make the statement that a good majority of the responsible wholesale houses would soon put a stop to such a practice on the part of their travelers were they informed of the fact of its being done, they realizing that the policy was but a short cut to the orders of the house concerned being cut off in the near future. But, be that as it may, there is too much of this middle-selling going on, and the retailer who are cognizant of it are fast developing a full blown attack of resentment and are thinking things.

The retailer is something more than a mere convenience. He is not altogether a dub who stocks his shelves with a complete stock that the hotel man may, when he finds himself unable to wait for goods from the wholesale, slip across the street and purchase a few articles from him.

Logically he is entitled, under terms of fair competition, to a share of all the business of his town. When he realizes how strong he is he will make sure that he gets that share.

SUGAR UP AGAIN.

Following an advance in the New York market, Canadian refined granulated sugar rose ten cents on the hundred pounds on Wednesday morning, making the third increase in as many weeks.

To those who have been following the sugar situation, this last jump was not unexpected. Rather had it been waited for by the experts who have been keeping count of the feverish pulse of the chief American exchange. There, raw sugar has been playing at aeroplaning and since the first of February has been mounting higher almost continuously. True there were one or two reactions, when momentarily it appeared as though the toboggan slide had been reached, but always has the market recovered on some bit of news, until now it is again as high as ever.

Large sales were recorded in the early part of the week on a basis of $3.80, at New York. For the present it would seem as though the refiners temporarily held sufficient stocks for meltings, but the shippers contend that the stocks held by the manufacturers are too low for them to hold off long. It seems now to have settled down to a game of wait, and the market will go with the best waiter.

YOUR BROTHER IN BUSINESS.

B. W. Ziemann, of Preston, Ontario, Dominion president of the Retail Merchants' Association, said, while addressing the delegates of that organization at Guelph last week :—

"No man can be honest, and pay his honest debts if he continues in a career of price-cutting."

The president said more. He told the delegates that in his opinion the man who started, and kept up, a price-cutting war to secure business, and who failed, and who carried other and good men down in the wreck with him; was only fit to be sent to the City of Kingston to join some of our bankers in the penitentiary, where, if anywhere, all men are equal.

That's the question—how far are we responsible to each other? Let's suppose a case :

Suppose you go into a district where another had gone before, who is still there, and commencing to reap a little return after his hard pioneer work. Suppose you see he is getting all the trade and, commence to slash down prices — slash them so far that you are running business at a loss. Suppose, you were not quite successful, and your money went, and you FAILED, and, to continue the picture, suppose his money ran out and he failed.

Now, you will agree that you are responsible for your own cropper, but you will not admit that you are for his. But aren't you? He was there first, and had demonstrated his ability to make good. It was that ability which started you down, in fact. He had, not counted on a hurricane in his financing however, and that was where you came in. He had a right to live.

Legally you would be clear, but MORALLY,—how about THAT ?

CO-OPERATIVE DELIVERIES.

At a recent meeting of the grocers of Grand Island, Neb., it was decided to adopt a co-operative delivery system. Oscar Roeser presided as chairman. Contracts were signed up by all grocers doing delivering except two and they expressed a willingness to soon do so. There will be four deliveries to all parts of the city on five week days and five deliveries on Saturday.—Exchange.

Here is a development that is going to confront the dealers of this country in a few years. There are those who say the need of it is already upon us.

George E. Gibbard, during the convention of the Retail Merchants' Association at Guelph last week, brought this question up, and urged the meeting to take some position in regard to it. But this the convention would not do, clinging to the anchor of individual deliveries.

Mr. Gibbard argued that it was economically absurd for every dealer to deliver his own goods, as it meant that five or six delivery outfits, traveled up one street at the same time during the day, when ONE would do as well. He insisted that it cost more, in the case of canned meats, to deliver the product from the grocers' shelves to the consumer, than it did to take the beef on the hoof in Texas, and to follow it through all the stages up to the packing factory, and from there to the dealer.

It might be worth while to watch and see what comes out of this co-operative delivery movement.

THE BAKERY MERGER.

That old economic horse, "reduced cost of production in combination," is being urged forward again. This time it is not a union of iron, steel or coal men or of meat packers. It is the gentle, little loaf of bread, and kindred products, which give rhyme and reason to the cry.

A bakery merger with a capital of $5,000,000, is said to be afoot. Its field of operations would be the entire province of Ontario, and its factories would be located in London, Hamilton, Toronto, Ottawa and other cities. A solicitor, who claims to be the representative of moneyed interests, has been sounding some of the leading bakers in all these cities, but it is not yet known just how much success he has met with. Neither has it been ascertained who is the moving power behind the scenes.

As already stated the solicitor is enlarging on the possibility of turning out bread at a lower cost by reason of the snuffing out of competition, and the greater purchasing power of the money at stake every time the combination gave an order for raw material.

Theoretically, economically perhaps, trusts and combinations work out well; practically they stifle competition and lessen considerably the possibility of redress.

No doubt exists in the mind of any one that when John D. Rockefeller formed that wonderful trade machine known as Standard Oil, he did a mighty good stroke of business for Standard Oil, also for John D. Rockefeller. But with all the saving in cost in distribution that was there made, did the dealer make any more profit on his oil than before "John D." entered the field? Did the ultimate consumer get his light any cheaper?

That is why the combinations and trusts render themselves liable to unfavorable criticism when they harp on that old string: "lower cost of production." That is why from the public there comes continually the peculiarly pertinent enquiry; if there is tons of money saved, who is getting it all?"

APPOINT COMMITTEE.

Toronto, March 16.—The executive officers and advisory committee of the Toronto branch of the R.M.A., met on Tuesday night to consider the advisability of suggesting a revision of the constitution of the association, in order that the jurisdiction of the Toronto branch might be widened.

There was a representative attendance, and the gathering, which was presided over by R. W. Dockeray, soon settled down to the business in hand.

After considerable discussion a a committee of five was appointed to revise the constitution and draw up the amendments expressly desired by the meeting. This committee will report back to the advisory committee at their meeting next Monday night so that the approval of the delegates of the sections may go along with the suggested revisions and amendments to the Dominion Board of the R.M.A., which meets here on March 21st next.

It was also decided last night, it is said, that unless the Dominion board shall see its way to the allowance of the full purport of the amendments desired by the Toronto branch, the latter organization would feel compelled to go into the question of making arrangements for the future.

Business Rules for Troubled Grocers

Advice Tendered to Young Clerk Who Would Know What to do With Friend With Money and no Experience, and Also to the Friend—Why Dealer Should Imitate the Jobber.

By Henry Johnson, Jr.

A young man writes me as follows:

Gentlemen:—I am an interested reader of your paper, although not a subscriber; it comes to our store regularly. I am only a clerk, but I take pleasure in studying all the departments, and should the time ever come when I cannot have free access to it each week, I shall surely subscribe for it on my own account. I am trying to build myself up in the business and I think it is something that all clerks who are interested in their work should have. I have just sent a sample copy to a friend in another town with the hope that he will take the hint.

I notice you desire that clerks correspond with you. So, having got myself into a quandary, I come to you, hoping that you can help me out a little. I have risen rapidly in the profession, considering the few years since I started, till at present my time is worth $75 per month—at least, that is the pay I am drawing. Now, a man with $4,000 desires to invest it in a grocery, either new or old established. He has no knowledge of the business and he suggests that we might arrange to go in together—he to furnish the capital, I the experience, and both the same amount of labor. This man is now looking for a location, and there the matter rests at present.

The question with me is: What share of the business should I have?—supposing, of course, that the venture was a reasonably profitable one. Should my experience offset that amount of capital and we share equally over and above the original investment? Any advice in this matter will be appreciated. Will say that my savings are tied up in real estate, so I have nothing to invest, nothing to lose, but my time—that is worth $75 a month to me.

A Would-be Grocer.

I told my young friend that I thought an equitable arrangement might be made as follows: He might go into the grocery business with his $4,000 friend on a contract covering five years, he to draw $75 per month and his partner to draw a similar sum. Profits and losses (don't forget that there may be losses) to be shared equally after proper protection of the original $4,000 invested. Price of original business to be $4,000 and no more, during the five years. This writer to have the privilege of buying any share of the business he might be prepared to invest in up to half interest, and no interest whatever to be given or sold to any third party. Thus, at the end of five years, our friend should be the owner of one-half interest and be in a position to continue, withdraw, buy or sell—and he would be well paid for his time or "investment."

Dollars Against Experience.

Being consulted by his small nibs, it was, of course, my business to give him advice. And now, having done my duty by him and arranged things so he won't exactly get something for nothing, but will be compelled to earn whatever share he may get in the business, I feel free to say that for my part I would not want to be the man who would put up my good dollars against the alleged "experience" of such a small proposition. Better, a thousand times better, to go it alone and gather a little experience of my own first hand and at the usual high cost. 'Twould be vastly cheaper than "mixing" with such small potatoes as this boy. "All my savings," he says, "are tied up—they're safe; I need not fear for them. But I'd just as lief swap some of my valuable ideas for the savings of this friend who comes forward willing to trust me." Gentlemen, beware of the man who has not the backbone or generosity of character sufficient to go in share and share alike into a business which he himself professes to know so well that he is ready to let one inexperienced invest in it. I hope his friend may see this part of my suggestion, anyway.

Retailers' Great Trouble.

KNOW WHAT GOODS COST:—I shall never forget those words as long as I live. They did me more good than any number of sermons on business might have done. For they struck deep into the root of what was my trouble and what is the trouble with 90 per cent.—to put it mildly—of all the retail grocery stores to-day; we don't know what our goods cost. And that old friend of mine, to whom I think I owe fully half of what little I have achieved of success, pounded that into me once when I was trying to tell him what some stuff was costing me. It is eighteen years ago, and from that time I date any accurate figures I have made. Later on, when I had a glimpse of the inside of the wholesale grocery business and found how jobbers figure their costs, I learned a thing or two more of value. I found salesmen complaining that the "house" "swelled" the costs.

Do as Jobbers Do.

I looked into that in a quiet way to find what it meant. I learned that the jobber gathers together every item that enters into the cost of an article—price freight, drayage, rent or storage space, insurance, interest on money for the time of probable investment—actual in some cases, in others estimated—and then adds a small percentage to cover unforeseen expenses. The result is cost—actual cost—as he figures it; and it is probably 6 per cent. to 8 per cent. above what the goods cost as bought, plus freight. After I had finished my investigation, I decided that the thing to do was NOT TO GRUMBLE because the "house" did such things, but TO HUSTLE AROUND AND DO LIKEWISE! Thus, my cost to-day represents every direct expense connected with landing the goods in my store ready to sell, and on top of that I figure such margin as will give me a gross profit of from 20 per cent. to 25 per cent. on selling price.

Note that—ON SELLING PRICE!

Get that down fine, all ye who are in trouble—FIGURE YOUR MARGIN ON SELLING PRICE!

I do not think I'll go over that again in full detail, because every reader of these columns is familiar with my arguments and the demonstrations of their correctness as delineated by a number of highly successful grocers all over this country. I simply want to go on the theory that we are all agreed that such is the correct method and now we MUST FOLLOW IT.

How to Figure.

It will be obvious to each of you, if he will do a little figuring, what a great difference will be shown in his costs if he figures:

1st. Cost of goods per invoice without freight and adds 20 per cent. of that cost to get selling price, or

2nd. Cost and freight, adds 3 per cent. or so and then figures such sufficient addition to the total as will make 20 per cent. of his SELLING price clear gross profit.

Try it and see. Then you will understand why freight should be "cost of goods" and "not expense."

But we must reason further. Twenty per cent. average on selling price is good enough. It will make any man good money, provided he is only reasonably skillful in conducting his business. But the trouble is, "competition is quite close." Yes, it is. You cannot get 20 per cent. on sugar, for instance. Very well, you must get 25 per cent. and 30 per cent. and 40 per cent. where you can, to bring up the average. And you can do that on a thousand items right in your grocery stock.

Watch the Markets.

Next, you must buy right. Watch the markets. Study the prices and compare the offerings of your salesmen with others' offerings. And be frank. Tell every one of them that you must get ahead and they must help you.

Next, get down every item in your stock that is past season, or passing out of season or is old and shopworn. Put these things out in front, one or two as a time, and sell them. Make a low price. Make them move. Get them sold, no matter what they cost you. That will have two effects. It will give you ready money for stuff that's presently a burden to you; and it will get up a little excitement among your customers. They will get so interested in you and like so much to trade with a live hustler that when you get in somethingthing new—as you must—and offer them something others have not yet stocked, at a fair margin of profit, they will not scare away, but buy your goods and enable you to make some money.

Do Not Worry.

With these simple rules consistently followed out, with tidiness of store and cleanliness of stock, with energy and push, with careful buying and CORRECT figuring of costs, with alertness and activity, you will succeed. And a final word to you: Do not worry. Work hurts nobody, but care killed the cat—with her nine lives against your one. Keep well, eat well, sleep enough, work while you work, and when your doors close leave your business locked in your store without a thought. Thus will you build up a good business, I care not where or under what competition, and you'll make enough money to be self-reliant and happy.

And more than these things is given unto no man.

The Markets—Sugar Advances 10 Cents

Following the Upward Movement in New York—Sales in Sugar Have Been Large—Olives continue Firm—Supplies are Light—Candied Peel Has Advanced In Primary Market—Some Grades of Coffee Advance.

QUEBEC MARKETS

POINTERS—
Olives—Firm and advancing.
Candied Peel—Primary market advanced.
Filberts—Price advanced.
Brazils—Very scarce.

Montreal, March 16.—The general grocery markets do not show many pronounced changes this week although there are a number of movements that are worthy of notice. In regard to olives it is well known among the trade that they have been high for some time and that they have not shown sign of weakness. It is now reported among the trade that olives are advancing as the result of the light supplies.

Reports from the primary markets in regard to candied lemon and orange peel and also candied citron, state that prices are firm and advancing, a scarcity of raw stock being given as the reason.

While there is no unusual trade in nuts at present, Brazils are reported scarcer and filberts are advanced in price owing to a scarcity of supplies.

General business continues to be satisfactory, orders coming in freely and for generous quantities. With the breaking up of winter the roads generally become difficult for traveling and for a time country buying may be more or less affected from this scource.

Dried fruits and canned goods are in the same position as nuts. They have been reduced in quantity until it is a question how far the supply will meet the demand until new crops will be available.

Sugar.—There is a good trade passing in sugar, though the price has advanced 10 cents on previous week. The market is considered firm locally, and the recent activity has been beneficial to business. While the raw market continues firm owing to the reports of a Cuban shortage, those who follow the markets are not forgetting that the present year found a heavy increase in the production of European beets. These are yet to be taken into consideration. One report tritely remarks, "speculative movements are queer things."

Syrups and Molasses.—The market in syrups is steady and is enjoying a rather brisk trade. Enquiry for molasses is good and the prospects for higher prices, based on the Cuban sugar reports, are still referred to. Business in molasses is brightening.

Dried Fruits.—In the primary markets prunes are still higher. With stocks as low as they apparently are, it is only to be expected that prunes will continue to be firm. The stocks that are now held are only in particular sizes the others having been exhausted. Reports state regarding currants that the stocks held in Greece are hardly sufficient to meet present requirements. Owing to the shortage of the grape crop in France, Grecian currants are being bought up for wine making purposes.

Coffee.—There has been no particular change to report in local coffee circles. Regarding the primary market one statement says: "All markets are now in an unsatisfactory condition. Confidence has been shaken and the markets will probably remain unsettled until the valorizarion sales are over in April. Nevertheless, we cannot get away from the fact that consuming markets, especially those of Europe are very poorly supplied and require millions of bags yet from producing countries before the crop season comes to an end." The advice from this scource is to take advantage of the present depression in price and buy liberally.

CANNED GOODS

Toronto.—Trade is about normal, with a slight increase reported in canned salmon during the past week. This was due, no doubt, to the Lenten demand for this article. It is pointed out by one dealer that tomatoes at $1.50 a dozen have about reached their limit, as they can be brought in from the United States markets and sold at that figure. Gallon apples continue high, being quoted at $3.50 to $3.60 per dozen.

Montreal.—There is practically no change in canned goods since last week. Changes will depend almost entirely upon the whim of the wholesalers who are holding stocks, for supplies are said to be entirely in their hands with the prices to be regulated as they see fit. The general report is favorable, being to the effect that trade is good. There does not seem to be any danger that the trade will be burdened with heavy stocks at the conclusion of this business year.

POINTERS—
Sugar—10c advance.
Coffee—Some grades advance.
Evaps.—Stocks are low.
Mace—Up 5c pound.

Toronto, March 16.—Sugar advanced ten cents on Wednesday to $4.60 in Toronto, following the market in New York. Trade in sugar has baeen brisker during the past two weeks than would be expected after the twenty-cent increase in prices. Refiners have been taxed to their utmost in filling orders, and the country must be well supplied now. The market still shows steadiness.

Maricaibo and Gautemalo coffees have been advanced another two cents per pound by most firms, in accordance with primary values. All other grades are firm, especially Jamiaca and Mexican. Chicory is a decided scarce article at present, and prices have been advanced 2 cents per pound. The local market is about depleted of this article but some shipments are on the way from England. They may be badly needed when they arrive.

Dried fruits still maintain their firmness, with the situation in prunes becoming more acute each week.

Currants and raisins are moving slowly, but there is a considerable trade in figs. The trade in syrups keeps up well and an improvement is noticeable in the demand for maple syrup. Molasses is very quiet.

Sugar.—The strength which was noted in the sugar market last week resulted in a further advance in refined of ten cents on Wednesday, making quotations in Toronto, 4.60 per cwt., a total advance of 30 cents since the market turned upward. This advance was due to the higher values for raws which are now quoted gt 3.86 in New York. The market, at the present time, shows steadiness, but future movements are dependent on raw values. As pointed out before, it seems to have resolved itself into a battle between holders and refiners and future prices depend a great deal on which one is forced to move first. Much depends upon the attitude of Europe, where speculation is active despite the fact that the last beet crop report showed an increase of 2,000,000 tons which must be absorbed.

Syrups and Molasses.—A brisk trade continues in surups, and retailers are evidently pushing this line. Some firms note an increase in the sale of maple syrup, but molasses shows little improvement.

Dried Fruits.—Trade in dried fruits is continuing normal, but there is a noticeable slackness in both raisins ond curin the primary markets while there is a rants. Currants still continue steady noted firmness in Valencia raisins, but firmness is the feature of all the dried fruits at present. Stocks are very light. The situation in prunes is getting more acute each week as stocks gradually grow shorter, but the trade in this line keeps up well, considering the high values, demonstrating that prunes have a trade of their own. Apricots and peaches are among those that are gradually passing into retailers' hands, while figs are attracting considerable attention on account of their low price compared with other fruits.

Tea.—The firmness in the tea market may be shown by the February reports of sales in the primary markets. For Indian tea, it says: "The moderate volume placed on sale was taken readily with a generally improved tone. The demand was good throughout and prices generally tended upwards as the month advanced."

The Ceylon report says: "In the early sales the quality continued to be poor, but some improvement was shown as the month advanced. The market absorbed the quantity with ease and some advance in prices was recorded, especially upon the lower grades."

Java says: "The moderate quantities offered were readily taken at full prices," while China reports: "Although the total trading was small, there was relatively a larger business being done, and certain grades are now in very limited supply."

By this it may be assumed that values are gradually rising upward.

Coffee.—Maricaibo and Gautemalo coffees, which advanced two cents per pound two weeks ago, are being quoted at a further advance of 2 cents by most firms and prices on these two lines now range from 22 to 24 cents. As stated before, this is not due to any new strength in primary markets, but because values, here, did not rise with the primary markets. When new stocks were purchased, higher prices had to be paid, with a consequent advance in price to the retailer. However the highest grades are unchanged, although they are firm in sympathy with the advance in lower grades. At the present Mexican coffee is particularly strong, as a result no doubt of the revolution in that country, but to what extent values will be affected is a question. Trade continues at about the same volume.

Spices.—Trade in spices seems to be keeping up well for this time of the year and dealers are well satisfied with business. Bulk mace has been advanced 5 cents per pound, and is now quoted at 80 cents, with some firms quoting as high as 85 cents in small quantities. Mace at the present time is about twice the quotations of a year ago. Cloves are firm.

MANITOBA MARKETS

Pointers—

Sugar—Advanced.

Syrup—Continues moderate.

Coffee—Advanced.

Whole Peas—Very scarce.

Peaches—Advanced.

Winnipeg, March 16.—There is an active movement in the general line of groceries at the present time owing chiefly to the fact that traffic is good and dealers are replenishing their depleted stocks The continued reports of expected advances in many lines has increased the ordering and such lines as are advancing are quite scarce in the jobbers' hands.

Importers are turning their attention to the Western field and stocks in coop centres have been reserved for Western territory. Merchants everywhere are in splendid buying condition as they had a satisfactory turnover, and travelers report very bright prospects everywhere.

Sugar.—We quote the advanced price of a few days ago in the following list. Local dealers are of the opinion that the advances in the past are temporary, although the following figures may be held for some time. There was a brisk demand for sugar as soon as transportation opened up, and now dealers are pretty well stocked and the movement is light.

Dried Fruits.—The feature of the dried fruit market is the continued scarcity of prunes and the advance in peaches. The stock of prunes in the city is very limited although merchants are fairly well stocked for the present. Peaches are quoted at about 16½c. which is a high figure. Dates are somewhat weak, but advances are expected shortly on all new imports.

Syrup.—There is nothing new to report in the syrup market. The trade is only moderate and the prices unchanged. Competition in the syrup market has had the tendency to cut prices. 2's $1.98, 5's $2.33, 10's $2.21, 20's $2.22.

Coffee.—We quote an advance in coffee. The primary price has been high for some time and the advance was not unexpected.

Coffee, standard Rio	0 15	Coffee, choice	0 16
		Coffee, extra choice	0 17

Beans and Peas.—There is a good demand at the present time for beans, although there has been a reduction made in the price. These two conditions seem to be consistent, but the reduction is due to recent reports of heavy stocks in the east and a slackness in the demand in the east. The outlet was the west where a good demand prevailed. Whole peas are very scarce in the west and wholesalers have trouble securing stocks, and they are paying as high as $2.30. The quotations to the trade to-day for whole peas is $2.35 per bushel. Split peas are moving well.

Beans, 3-lb. picker, per bushel	2 10
Hand picked, per bushel	2 20
Peas, split, 100 lbs.	2 85

Tapioca and Sago.—The cereal market is rather quiet. Tapioca is quite unchanged both in price and demand, while sago is advanced ½c. Barley is moving well, and prices are held very firm at the following figures.

Pearl tapioca, per lb	0 06¼	0 06¾
Sago, per lb	0 05	0 06
Pearl barley, 98 lb. sack		3 55
Pot barley, 98 lb. sack		2 55

Cream of Tartar.—The recent advance of 2c per lb. is held firmly at the present time. The majority of stock is moving in 25 lb. pails, the price being 31½c per pound.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

St. John, N.B., March 15.—The markets have been rather quiet this week, no changes of any importance being recorded. The sugar market shows signs of strength which it is thought may mean higher prices in the near future. A quantity of Barbadoes sugar is being offered at 3½ cents per pound in original barrels. New fancy Barbadoes molasses is now quoted at 27 and 28 cents per gallon and it is expected that as the prices on the island are very firm there will be no lower prices this season.

With the advent of warmer weather the jobbers are pushing the sale of seeds and samples are now being sent out. Never in the history of the seed business, the dealers say, has timothy been as scarce and high as it is this season. Since the opening of the market in January there has been a strong advance and quotations now are $15 to $15.75 for standard grades.

INFORMATION FOR BUYERS.

Supplied to the Trade by Sellers.

Fussell & Co., London Eng., desire to draw the particular attention of dealers to the new line advertised in The Grocer viz., Fussell's Genuine Thick Rich Cream, which is better than "Devonshire Cream." To some perhaps the term "Devonshire Cream" conveys nothing, but to those who have ever been in the west of England, or for that matter any part of England, "Devonshire Cream" conveys a great deal. It is a very thick cream that makes a most excellent companion to any fresh, stewed, bottled or tinned fruits. Hitherto, except where one could get one's own fresh thick Cream, one has had to be satisfied with Evaporated Milk, (previously known as "Evaporated Cream;" the Canadian laws prohibit the latter title now). Fussell & Co., Ltd., of London, England, and of Norway, the well-known contractors to the British Government, have recently introduced into Canada their celebrated "Golden Butterfly" brand of Thick Rich Cream, which they justly describe as "better than Devonshire Cream." It is skimmed from the milk of cows grazing on the renowned high Norwegian pastures, and the article is itself untouched by hand throughout all its processes. It is packed in convenient key-opening tins, which being completely sterilized, keep the contents good for any length of time unopened in any climate. This article has never previously been put before the Canadian public, and is one that once used will be always used. Anyhow, retail dealers welcome its advent. If any dealer has difficulty in procuring the Cream, he may apply to any agent of Fussell & Co. in Canada.

F. W. Fearman & Co., Hamilton, have appointed Wm. H. Dunn, Montreal, as their selling representative.

The Johnson Richardson Co. regret that they are unable to show more clearly in their ad. this week, the highly artistic rosewood cabinet which now forms a part of the store equipment of many retailers throughout the country. Merchants who are not as yet acquainted with Dyola should certainly look into this matter.

Price of Cheese, Provisions, Eggs, Now and Year Ago

While echoing throughout the length and breadth of the land, goes "the high cost of living" cry, it is interesting to compare the price of pork products obtaining now with the quotations ruling a year ago. This is at least one line where the change in price has been beneficial to consumers, and the dealer with this argument behind him should be able to make sales easier. Prices ruling now and a year ago are as follows:

	Pound A year ago.	Pound Now
Long clear bacon, ...	14½	11½
Smoked breakf't bacon	18½	18
Roll bacon	14½	13
Light hams	16	15
Large hams	15½	14
Shoulder hams	13½	12
Backs—plain	18½	18½
Backs—peameal	19	19
Lard in pails	16½	12¾
Lard, compound	12¾	11
	1.59¼	1.44¾

Thus, it will be seen that if we had bought a pound of each of the above articles a year ago, it would have amounted to $1.59¼, while at present, the same goods may be purchased for $1.44¾. The reduction has amounted to about 9½ per cent. Live hogs, which a year ago ranged from $9.00 to $9.15, are now quoted at $6.90, while dressed hogs which brought $12.25 last year are now $9.25 to $10.00.

Eggs supply another illustration of a line which has been greatly reduced, and compares as follows:

	A year ago.	Now
New laid eggs.....	31	24
Storage eggs	28	16

Cheese is ½ to 1 cent higher than a year ago, some lines of poultry are cheaper and others dearer while honey shows practically no change. The comparison in butter is as follows:

	A year ago	Now
Fresh creamery	29	28
Creamery solids	26	25
Farmer's separator....	24	23
Dairy prints	22	20
Tub butter	20	19

These are statistics which might be turned to future profit by a good live dealer.

Egg Prices Fall Under Heavy Arrivals

Mild Weather Has Induced Larger Supplies and Quotations are Lower—Butter is Firm and Shipments are not Large — Montreal Provision Prices are Down—Market is Unsettled — Cheese Quiet but Firm.

The Lenten season seems to be having its effect on the provision trade and the amount of business passing is not as large as desirable. It is somewhat between seasons just now, most lumber camps having broken up, while the spring trade has not yet gathered headway. Railway construction camps have caused an increase in trade in some centres while at others many orders are being received from the mining camps of the north. However, prospects for trade this spring are bright and dealers are looking forward to a good season's busi-

The provision market still seems to be in an unsettled condition. While Toronto prices have been maintained, the market in Montreal has shown a number of slumps. Prices of live and dressed hogs have been dropping and this added to accumulation of spot stocks has caused the weakness. In the United States hog arrivals have not been quite as large as expected and prices are steady, but the future of the market is uncertain. In England, provision prices remain steady.

Butter continues firm and in some centres advances in price have taken place. There has been a good demand especially for the higher grades with quite a quantity of inferior being offered. The arrivals of late have been short both in dairy and creamery.

It was pointed out in our last issue that if milder weather continued there would be an increase in egg receipts which would have an effect on prices. This increase has materialized and prices have been reduced. The demand has been good but stocks seem to be increasing and if the weather continues fine, it is expected that prices will go still lower. It is pointed out, however, that the breaking up of the roads in the country may interfere somewhat with the delivery.

Although the trade in cheese is quiet, prices remain firm. Poultry is not brisk but there is a feeling that the market will soon show some improvement. Some shipments of storage poultry from Ontario to Nova Scotia have been made.

MONTREAL.

Provisions.—The market has shown a number of slumps again, the change being recorded at the very close of last week. Of late the price in live and dressed hogs has been dropping and this added to the accumulation of all lines of pickled and smoked meats on spot is accountable for the weakness that has prevailed. The demand for barrelled pork is lighter than usual and decided decreases have been made in this market. Pure lard is on the reduced list and hams and bacon are also down. At the reduced prices of the latter an improvement has been reported in the amount of business passing and not a few orders have been closed for Easter demand. The season is one of the influences on the market and it will be a few weeks before that cause is removed. In the meantime the trade are wondering whether to buy or wait for further reductions.

Eggs.—The receipts of eggs continue to be liberal and with the increased supplies there is a corresponding reduction in prices. Demand is good and business is favorable but stocks seem to keep increasing. From 23 to 25 cents is the range now quoted for fresh eggs, and the tendency is lower. With the breaking up of winter and the country roads, the farmers' marketing is bound to be hampered, and the receipts of eggs may show some effect, but it is not expected to make very much difference.

Provisions.—Although trade in provisions is a little quiet at present, allowance has to be made for the fact that the Lenten season switches trade from this line to a certain extent. Dealers are looking forward to a good season, as prospects appear to be bright. Live hog prices show little change from a week ago, but dressed hogs are now quoted at $9.00 per cwt. Provisions on the whole appear to be steady, with the exception of smoked meats, which show a slightly easier feeling. Smoked breakfast bacon is now quoted at 16 to 17½ cents per lb.

Butter.—The firm feeling continues in butter and has resulted in slightly higher prices in some cases. Farmer's, separator and dairy prints have both advanced from one to two cents per pound, while some firms are asking higher prices for creamery also. The arrivals of butter have been none too large, while a percentage of shipments are lacking in quality. There has been a good demand, but for only the higher grades, so that the firmness is noticeable in this line. The short arrivals some time ago resulted in quantities of storage being taken up, so that it is believed that present storage stocks are not large.

Eggs.—With the continuance of the mild weather, arrivals have been larger, and this seems to have had a decidedly bearish effect on prices. There has been a big rush of eggs to the market, and prices have declined 2 cents on the dozen, now being quoted at 21 and 22 cents. The demand is good, and prices will probably tend to enhance this. If the fine weather continues, dealers look for a further reduction and a plentiful supply for Easter requirements. Storage eggs are nearly a thing of the past on this market.

Michigan Butter Men Reaching Out for Sarnia Cream

By F. C. Slater.

The milk and cream industry in the Sarnia district received an impetus with the enactment of the American tariff law of August 5, 1909, whereby the duty on cream was reduced to five cents per gallon.

Prior to this time no cream was exported from this district to the American side, but immediately thereafter large quantities were gathered in the boundary territory of Ontario and exported to a creamery at Port Huron, Mich.

From the date of the passage of the tariff law to the close of December, 1909, 23,223 gallons were exported. For the year ended December 31, 1910, 112,268 gallons were sent to Michigan, for which the Dominion farmer obtained, on an average, 70 cents per gallon, aggregating $122,168. The average test of butter fat was 27 cents per pound. It cost the creamery 3 to 5 cents per pound butter fat for transportation and duty to bring the cream to its factory. The Port Huron creamery plans to largely increase the business for 1911 by putting two or three cream express cars into service, whereby the cream can be gathered more quickly and systematically along the railroads for 70 or 75 miles from the border, these cars to go out in the evening and return loaded in the early forenoon of the following day. In expectation of this increased service, the farmers of this section have shown their intention of enlarging their herds. It has been estimated that the number of cows milked for this purpose will be nearly doubled by spring.

Wheat Prices Continue at Low Level

Flour Prices Still Show no Change—Trade is Not Brisk—Export Enquiries Out of Line With Present Prices—Damage by Hessian Fly in States Said to be Small—Normal Trade in Cereals—Prices Remain Unchanged.

Canadian wheat prices continue at low water mark, but flour prices still show no change. First patents Manitoba are quoted in Montreal at $5.60, and in Toronto at $5.40 per barrel. Local trade is not brisk and export enquiry has not been heavy, many of the bids being considerably out of line with values quoted here.

United States wheat prices advanced at the end of last week because of rumors of damage to crops by the Hessian fly, but when investigation proved the damage to be insignificant there was a reaction in value. When the advance took place, United States millers asked higher prices for flour, but buyers paid not the slightest attention, as they did not seem to want flour at any price. So it would appear that flour prices will react also.

It will be the same old battle between the bulls and bears as the season advances, and the crop prospects become known. The Hessian fly was the beginning of the battle on the part of the bulls. The appearance of 16 Hessian fly eggs on a stalk of wheat near Canton, Ill., not only offset the bearish nature of foreign reports, but advanced prices one cent. No doubt this little insect will be used to good advantage if at all possible, there being no excuse for stories of damage by drouth, and none from alternate frosts and thaws. Other factors having apparently been exhausted during the past few years, this insect was turned loose in the wheat arena to aid in the movement for higher prices.

The total world's shipments of wheat last week were 12,320,000 bushels, as compared with 12,362,000 last week and 11,408,000 bushels last year. The visible supply of wheat in Canada is 9,390,000 bushels, against 9,539,000 last week, and 8,101,000 last year.

A normal trade is passing in cereals. Rolled oats remain unchanged in price, with oats slightly easier. It is the Plate oats that are keeping prices down in the English market, but it is felt that shipments from the Argentine will decrease in a few weeks' time and that there will then be a chance for the shipment of Canadian oats. The visible supply of oats in Canada is 6,659,000 bushels as compared with 5,045,000 bushels a year ago.

MONTREAL.

Flour—The local market shows no changes as far as prices are concerned. The demand is steady and a moderate amount of business is passing. Export enquiry has not been heavy and the bids were considerably out of line with the values here. The situation is rather interesting just now. In the United States millers are looking for higher prices for flour because wheat has strengthened and at the same time the amount of wheat carried over is reported to be the heaviest in years. There are no surface indications here that suggest any movement.

Flour—Both flour and wheat are on the same level as a week ago, flour at $5.40 for 1st patent and No. 1 northern Manitoba wheat at 97½ cents. The continued low price of wheat has induced some dealers to hope that lower flour values are warranted, but as the flour trade is not particularly brisk, being confined mostly to the delivery of contracts, it is probable that no change will take place. Ontario wheat continues at a low level, hovering between 80 and 81 cents, with trade in Ontario flour none too brisk, although there was an increase in the export trade at the first of the month.

Lesson Learned About "Quality" In our Foodstuffs

Vancouver, B.C., March 16.—"I was recently struck by a couple of lines in The Canadian Grocer's advertising section," remarked a dealer this morning to the Grocer representative. "The postman had thrown my copy face down on the counter, and on the back page I read the testimony of one of the big advertisers. It was: 'I like your paper all the more, because in every issue you advocate dealers handling quality goods.' I guess nearly every dealer has found that it really does pay to keep the best and satisfy the customer. Bargain qualities may go for a while, but the man who eats is heard very often to say that he does not care what he pays as long as he gets what he wants good. Even when eggs are over five cents each, the demand is greater than the supply. It is then, in fact, that the demand is greater in proportion, for being inclined to try cheaper eggs because of the very high price the customer often gets a tainted one. The principle applies to every line. And generally the profit is at a higher percentage than on the cheaper goods, which is an item to take into consideration besides getting a good name for one's store.

"With the older merchants this is well known about the Klondike trade. It is an old story now but it is always a fine lesson. When the rush started, Vancouver, being the nearest point, had the advantage. Everything available was shipped — eggs of unknown age, butter that had secured strength with time, and such like. It was figured out that the men in the north would be glad to get anything. Although prices were very high there, the best was demanded, and Canadian trade lost out. Three years after it was difficult to place a consignment of Canadian perishables in Dawson, simply because of the record. The United States dealers saw what was required, met the demand and Seattle got the biggest part of the trade, and that out of Canadian territory.

"I think The Canadian Grocer should make those words a permanent fixture in a prominent part of the paper."

CUTTING IN SUGAR.

Considerable of This Being Done in Central Ontario City.

Peterboro, Ont., Mar. 16. — This city has seen a great deal of cutting in sugar lately, some of the retailers selling at cost and even under. One or two of them, some time ago, advertised the cut price and were apparently selling sugar at a loss considering cost and freight, and expense of doing business.

This caused considerable talk among the trade, on sugar, but the majority of retailers refused to sell at prices which would mean losses to them.

"I find that the majority of my customers," remarked one dealer, "do not ask for the cut price. Some, of course do, but the majority do not care to deal with a merchant who has a tendency to cut prices; I don't believe the better class of householders care to have the neighbors see the delivery wagon of a price-cutter call—it looks too cheap. I do not think either that much permanent trade of a good character is gained by price-cutting and I for one will never do business on that plan."

Those who have been cutting claim they are selling quite a bit of sugar and no doubt they are. At present one dealer is quoting the best grade of granulated at $4.53—the exact cost laid down here.

Practical Methods of Retail Stores

New Brunswick Man Who Believes Dealer Should Know Goods Thoroughly—How Brantford Dealer Made Seeds Profitable Side Line—Chatham Grocer Makes Specialty of Telephone Customers—Montreal Dealer's Method in Getting Rid of Dogs.

Learned From Manufacturer.

St. John, N.B., March 16.—A local dealer, who is convinced that a grocer must understand his goods before he can sell them properly, recently related how he went about the introduction of a new line of goods into his business.

"I decided to push the sale of a new line of goods that was being placed on the market," he said, "because it paid a good profit. I thought there was a good chance to extend sales in this line. However, before I put in a stock, I went to both the wholesaler and the manufacturer and learned everything possible about its manufacture and different uses, and, as a result, when the shipment arrived, I was enthusiastic about it. I instructed my clerks, and as a result when they introduced it to a customer, they could talk so well of the article and its qualities that they rarely failed in making a sale.

Now, if I had placed that line in stock without first studying it, very likely the first shipment would be still on the shelf, while at the present my sales in that line are quite large and still growing."

Seeds as Side Line.

Brantford, Ont., Mar. 16.—A local grocer says that he pushes seeds every year because, in addition to the reasonable profit which is reaped directly, it also serves to draw other trade to the store. He always gets in his supply of seeds early and begins to display them at the beginning of the season,, that he may be the first to interest the farmer in this line. He places them in a prominent part of his store, so that they will catch the eye of customers. From the first he has made quality, the feature of his seed trade, and the keynote of his advertising and sale talks, and the result has been an increase in trade each year, as the farmer will continue to buy seeds from the merchant whom he can depend upon to supply the best only. This merchant, by display, both in the store and window, advertising in the local paper, proper sales talk and the handling of only the best seed, has built up a very profitable side line in his business.

The Telephone Customer.

Chatham, Ont., Mar. 16.—"Treat the telephone customer just the same as you would a man who comes into the store," is, in brief, the idea of Geo. S. Bartlett, of the King Edward Grocery, who makes a feature of the handling of telephone orders.

"We always make it a point to send just what is ordered," said Mr. Bartlett the other day. "We never substitute—not in the least. It is better to say, out and out, that an article is not in stock, than to send something "just as good" that, you know very well, the customer will regard as inferior. If we haven't the article asked for we say so and usually sell something else—but we always let the customer know.

"And we never promise to send a thing up by a certain time unless we know it will reach the place by that time.

"Many a time I've had this experience. A customer will ask me to deliver an order by half past five. 'Make it six,' I say. 'Why don't you say you'll get it up by half past five?' he asks; and I answer: 'Because I can't promise. I do promise to have it up by six, and I may have it there by half past five.' In that way there are no come-backs, no complaints. Fair dealing is something which all customers appreciate; and telephone customers particularly appreciate it."

Mr. Bartlett features the telephone number in all his newspaper and other advertising. It is a particularly helpful item in regard to the fresh fruit and vegetable business, another feature of this store; for telephone customers, noticing an advertisement of something of this sort just in, instinctively feel the need or ordering immediately.

Selling Power of Comparison.

North Bay, Ont., Mar. 16.—A local grocer recently made window display of baking powder. In the foreground was a very badly baked cake, with a show card on which was inscribed: "She did not use Blank's Baking Powder." Back a little and raised above the window floor was another cake on which the cook's best efforts had been expended and which bore a card "She used Blank's Baking Powder." Around these exhibits were three pyramids of baking powder on the centre of which was a card with the words: "Of all sad words of tongue or pen, the saddest are these: 'It might have been."

Cash Arguments in Alberta Town.

Viking, Alta., Mar. 16.—Hilliker Bros., general merchants, who recently adopted the cash system, are determined to stick to the principle if they can, and also to hold the business of Viking in the confines of Viking. They use the news columns of the local paper freely to attain their desire. Recently an issue of the newspaper came out, containing a story in which the merchants pointed out that the reason so many of the good folks of Viking sent away for goods, was the delusion that they saved money by so doing. They urged, that, now they were selling for cash they could sell as cheap as the cheapest." They urged customers to bring along their catalogues to their store and compare prices. And the dealers laid emphasis on the point that customers did not have to pay for goods a week ahead, but just at the time they bought them in Viking. Lack of carried accounts supplied them power to save to their customers.

Handles Potatoes by Weight.

Halifax, N.S., March 16.—Handling potatoes by weight only is the method which has been adopted by a prominent merchant of this city to set at rest the almost continuous grumblings of his customers.

"All the tubers that come in and go out of my store are weighed" said he, "so that I pay for exactly the quantity I get and my customers for the weight they receive. I think it is the best plan. When I bought and sold by the bag, I was continually receiving complaints from customers who imagined, rightly or wrongly, they were not getting full value for their money. Now all potatoes are weighed when received, and a slip bearing figures denoting the weight, pasted upon it. Complaints never come any more."

Getting Rid of Dogs.

Montreal, March 16.—There are a great many stores which have signs on the doors, "No Dogs Allowed Inside." "Some days ago," remarked a Montreal dealer, while waiting on a man customer, "I kicked a canine intruder gently from between the counters in my store and, while finishing what I was at, told the man about the progressiveness of certain cities in this regard. I expressed my approval of the idea and said that, if ladies really could see what miscellaneous dogs did in grocery stores where food was necessarily exposed for sale, they would be the most scrupulously careful to leave their dogs at home or outside.

"Just as the man left I saw a lady sitting near who looked a trifle grave. She would not have attentions from me. When she rose to go I saw the dog followed her. Then I understood. But I noted that she returned in a few days—without her dog—and permitted me to serve her. I was able to conclude, therefore, that maybe my little talk in her hearing had not been entirely lost."

Trade is Improved by Milder Weather

More Business in Both Fruits and Vegetables—With Approach of Spring Grocers Have Chance to Increase Sales—Imported Tomatoes Lower—California Celery Going — Florida Crops Attracting Attention.

The milder weather which has prevailed in most centres has had the effect of stimulating trade in both fruits and vegetables, and business will probably continue to improve as spring draws nearer. It is pointed out that as the weather becomes milder, people frequent the streets more and the merchant should take advantage of this to increase sales in fruits and vegetables by proper display of these lines in his windows. They sell better in this way than over the phone or by order.

The reduction which has taken place in imported tomatoes has put them on a better selling basis and an improvement in sales is noted. They are now low in comparison with prices at this time last year. Orange shipments have shown a decrease on account of the rains in California, and prices show steadiness. The fruit arriving now is showing a little waste and it is only a question of a few days until the oranges will have to be brought in in iced cars. All California celery is now in and attention has been turned to Florida crops.

Marmalade oranges, after a fairly satisfactory year, have been pretty well cleaned off the markets.

MONTREAL.

Green Fruits—The evidences of business in new green fruit are becoming more apparent and the real opening of the season is rapidly approaching. Apples are still demanding considerable attention on account of their scarcity and consequent high prices. A steady trade is passing in oranges, and lemons are also receiving their share.

TORONTO.

Green Fruits—There has been a noticeable increase in the fruit trade since the arrival of milder weather, and dealers are looking for trade to improve considerably. The feature of the market is the reduction in the price of tomatoes. These have decreased $1 per case within ten days, and are now quoted at $3.50 to $4 per case of six baskets. They are of good quality, and dealers report them as selling well, as they are now as low as the Florida article dropped last year. There is a good demand for lemons, which are arriving in good quality and are steady at present quotations. Likewise oranges, as shipments have been somewhat affected by the wet weather in California. Strawberries are selling fairly well considering the price, which still remains high.

Vegetables—Dealers report that the trade in vegetables is fairly brisk and will undoubtedly improve as the weather grows milder. Shipments of California celery have been cut off on account of the rains in that state, but the Florida product is arriving freely. Sweet potatoes are in shorter supplies and $2 per hamper is asked for them, while Ontario potatoes are moving quite freely at $1 per bag. Spanish onions are moving none too briskly, they being affected to a certain extent by the arrival of home-grown on the market.

used them, they will come back for more. It should be impressed upon the customers that only the best goods are used in canning, and that methods, strictly sanitary, are employed in their preparation. Sometimes it is well to choose one brand and sell that one exclusively, so that the quality of that particular brand can be forced home day after day. If possible, it is often wise to secure the full supply of each line from one factory, that the quality will be more uniform. Well advertised brands are easier to sell, but higher prices should not be paid only because that particular brand is well known, if another brand of equal quality can be bought at a lower rate. Thoroughly convinced that the quality of the goods he sells equals any other a merchant should have no difficulty selling any brand.

The Care of Canned Goods.

Care should be taken, other conditions being equal, to select brands with attractive labels as these are really important in making the sale. Instances have been reported where the sales of otherwise appealing goods, were hampered by an unattractive label. And in storing the goods, care, much care, also is required. It does not suffice that the boxes of canned goods be piled away in one of the darkest corners of your basement. Canned goods need light and air. Also a dealer should not pile his goods on the shelves, up against the wall. That hinders the passage of air. And he should not allow his goods to remain in the original box in which they came to him, if there exists in his mind the slightest idea that all was not well within. What would the dealer think of the housekeeper who stored away her preserves in a musty part of her cellar, and tolerated the presence of a broken sealer or container, dripping a pasty, sticky mass over the balance of iher little stock? That's the way it often is. If a can gets wet and is not wiped dry the chances are the can is going to rust up, and the label turn up at the corners, and be discolored. All these little things count. The age of stocks should also be kept in mind, because there are some who profess that where goods have been on the shelves for more than five or six months the product within stands in danger of spoiling. It is simple business to be careful.

Fish - Oysters

Weather Conditions Affect Fish Trade

Slight Reduction in Volume of Business Due to High Temperatures—Real Success of Trade Dependent on Weather — Good Steady Trade Looked For—Frozen Fish Quite Plentiful, and Salt Fish Scarce—Oyster Trade is Light.

In the fish market this week there is no very material difference to reier to. The weather has had a rather adverse effect on the demand for fish, the change to comparative mildness being not at all desired. The supply of frozen fish of all kinds is plentiful and the various conditions are tending to bring about lower prices. The volume of business has shown a slight reduction recently but the trade anticipates a good steady business through the rest of the Lenten season. In spite of the heavy demand that has been felt it is reported that stocks of frozen fish are pretty heavy yet.

Salt fish is scarce and many lines are entirely off the market. In the smoked lines there is an active demand for fillets and haddies; kippers and bloaters are also moving rather freely.

The volume of the oyster business is also lighter. The trade is fair but the demand is falling off and the season shows signs of waning. Lobsters continue scarce and are quoted a little higher. The supply is from hand to mouth and for this reason a high price is obtainable. The real success of the Lenten trade in fish is largely dependent upon the weather and probabilities are anxiously scanned. In the meantime the retailer should not forget this trade. Only two of the six weeks have passed as yet and there are still opportunities for new business.

QUEBEC.

Montreal.—Fresh frozen fish is still inclined to be easy and prices are correspondingly light. Demand is good but the milder weather is not looked upon favorably by the trade. Should it continue it will prove a drawback to the lines of frozen fish. Salt fish is still very scarce; some lines, such as sea and lake trout, green cod, green haddock, etc., being reported off the market by some of the houses. There is a steady demand for smoked fish with supplies apparently sufficient for the trade. Oysters are unchanged in price but conditions indicate a falling off in the demand. Lobsters are scarce and are bringing a stiff price.

ONTARIO.

Toronto.—The fish trade although affected to a certain extent by the milder weather during the past week, is keeping up well under the circumstances with fresh frozen fish still enjoying a good trade. Oyster business is at a low ebb but dealers appear well satisfied with the season's trade. There are practically no sea herrings offered here, while Labrador herring are about cleaned up. In the opinion of a local wholesaler Toronto dealers gauged the requirements in fish for this market to a nicety this year and that if trade continues as expected for the remainder of the Lenten season stocks will be pretty well cleaned up. Prices show very little change this week.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

St. John.—There has been a marked improvement in the fish situation here. A few weeks ago the dealers were viewing the outlook with considerable alarm, but during the last week the weather has been very mild and the fishermen have been able to get out regularly. In consequence receipts have been very satisfactory. Cod and haddock are in good supply and some fresh caught halibut have been received from Nova Scotia. Herring and gaspereau are plentiful, and in frozen fish, shad and mackerel are offered, as well as British Columbia salmon.

Dry fish continue scarce and high. Medium cod are now quoted at $6.75 per 100 pounds; pollock are offered at $4.50; No. 1 Labrador herring are $3.25 per half bbl. and medium smoked herring, 22 cents per box.

NOVA SCOTIA.

Halifax.—Halifax dealers report a demand for all the fish marketed. Only a limited supply of fish is coming in and the dealers are kept at their wits' ends filling the orders. There are no lobsters on the local market, and very few are being exported to the United States.

The coming season promises to be a brisk one in the fish business. Some dealers are quoting prices, and purchasing before the fish are caught. All the catch of the French fleet fishing out of St. Pierre, Miquelon, which will number about fifty sails, has been purchased by three large French firms. The average price is $3.85 per quintal dried salt bulk. This is an increase of 45 cents per quintal over the price paid last year. No price has yet been fixed for the catch by the shore fishermen.

Despite the presence of ice some of the fishermen on the Newfoundland coast are already at work and fish are reported plentiful. About 20 bankers are fishing at the La Poile grounds and are said to be making good catches. Of course it will be some time before the weather is sufficiently favorable for the curing of these fish.

Very few fish are left in the warehouses for export, and the local stocks of mackerel have been cleaned up. Since the Lenten season opened, grocers report a good demand for canned salmon.

ITEMS FOR BUSY DEALERS.

Little Jottings of Interest to Busy Retailers.

Twenty grocers in the city of Olean, N.Y., have a co-operative bakery which supplies these grocers with bread. So far no attempts have been made to supply other stores.

Grocers in Iowa and some of the other States of the American union have adopted the plan of selling banans by the pound. They claim this method is popular with consumers.

The world's production of tea is about 1,200,000,000 pounds annually. Of this, China produces 600,000,000; India, 262,000,000; Ceylon, 191,000,000; Natal, 2,000,000; Japan, 63,000,000; Java, Formosa and all other countries, 82,000,000 pounds. Thus it will be seen that 455,000,000 pounds are produced in the British Empire.

In a few years the production of raw cocoa beans has increased from 75,000 to 205,000 tons, while the nine leading consuming nations advanced their requirements 60 per cent. from 1903 to 1909.

A new substitute for butter has been placed on the market in Western Bohemia. It contains no animal fats, but is manufactured from cocoanut oil, the yolk of eggs, and a small proportion of cream. Cocoanut oil has been used for some time in Europe in the manufacture of oleomargarine under various names, but in combination with lard or other animal fats.

New York wholesalers, it is said, have decided to sell beans and peas by the hundredweight instead of bushel. All beans and peas will also be sold net weight and the following sets of tares was adopted: on cotton, seamless sacks, ¾ pound; one-bushel pockets, 3-8 pound; imported beans, jute sacks, 220 pounds, 2 pounds; California lima, ½ pound.

A co-operative society of consumers has been formed in Allentown, Pa., with a capital of $300,000 for the purchasing and selling of groceries at "a reasonable price." All prices charged will be the regular market prices, but all profits will be turned back to the members every three months. Over 100 families have already joined.

DEMONSTRATE FOOD VALUES OF CHEESE

University Students Caged by United States' Department of Agriculture, and Dieted on Product—Results Show Green Curds as Digestible and Nutritive as Riper Cheese—A Comparison With Meats.

Washington, D.C., March 16.—For several weeks the Department of Agriculture "caged" a number of Wesleyan University students and others and fed them on cheese for the purpose of demonstrating the food value of this American product. The preliminary experiments indicated that the welsh rabbit was a much-maligned institution. Secretary of Agriculture Wilson has issued a formal bulletin, giving the results of the experiments and singing the praises of American cheese.

The fact is brought out in the report that many of the volunteers who were "caged" and stuffed with cheese were Wesleyan University students at Middletown.

"The work at Middletown," says the report, "was planned to include green and ripe cheese, or cheese as soon after it was made as it was possible to ship the samples to Middletown, and cheese in all stages of ripening, up to the point where it was becoming unfit for consumption."

A total of 184 cheese experiments were made at Wesleyan and 65 human subjects, the most of them college students, availed themselves of an opportunity to fill up on free cheese. Each undergraduate who applied got at least a three-day diet of cheese, but one subject liked it so well that he submitted to fourteen experiments of three days each, a 42-day "cheese debauch." The department's report says that the students ranged from the ages of 19 to 32 years.

How Diet was Arranged.

The Wesleyan students were not held down absolutely to cheese. They got a few slices of bread with the crust removed, some bananas, and now and then, as a treat, a dose of charcoal. The charcoal was taken in capsule form and everything else possible was done to make the tests novel and pleasing. For instance, the students were not compelled to bite into a lump of the cheese, for it was cut into small pieces and then run through a finely graduated meat chopper.

"The results show," says the report, "that there is little or no difference in the comparative digestibility of cheese at different stages of ripening. The perfectly green curd was evidently as digestible, and so far as nutritive value was concerned, was as good a food as the cheese at any stage of ripening."

On the whole, the health of the cheese eaters, so the department says, seems to have been as good while they were on this cheese and banana diet as when they were eating a more varied and attractive fare.

Food Value and Cost.

Secretary Wilson says that a pound of cheese has nearly the same food value as two pounds of fresh beef or any other fresh meat. It is worth as much or more than a pound of ham, and is more digestible, and is equal to two pounds of eggs and three pounds of fish.

In price good cheese costs about a third more than round steak, and twice as much as the cheaper boiling beef, and costs practically the same per pound as smoked ham or bacon.

NO PAY FOR HOLES.

Mrs. Newed—I would like a pound of your best cheese.

Grocer—Yes, ma'am.

Mrs. Newed (examining it)—Why, this cheese is full of holes.

Grocer—Yes, ma'am; that's the way it comes.

Mrs. Newed—Well, I don't want any of it. I'm not going to pay for a pound of cheese that contains a half pound of holes!—Exchange.

Dicker & Co., Aurora, Ont., have purchased the business of T. H. Broad, grocer, of that place. Mr. Clarence L. Dicker managed the latter's business during the last two years. Mr. Lewis Wise, formerly with Towns & Co., has joined the new firm.

The members of the Toronto Retail Grocers' Association have arranged to hold an evening's entertainment on Wednesday, March 22, at the St. Charles. In addition to a program there will be a dinner. The secretary is C. F. Thorne, 107 Nassau Street, and the president, W. C. Miller, Yonge street.

The Grocer's Encyclopedia—Eastern Fig

Conditions Under Which Little Food Fruit of Mystical East Grows and Ripens—The Care of—Picking and Packing for Market—Place of Fig in Life of Eastern Countries—Its Growing Sale.

If people would but recognize the medicinal value of the fig and its marked food values, a much greater quantity would be consumed than is now the case. Just now there is a fairly active demand but dealers say it is almost altogether due to the fact that the price is down pretty low and that as other lines of dried fruits are high in price, the call has merely swung fig-ward.

It is a pity that more figs are not used in Canadian households. Probably one reason is the deeply-rooted Occidental idea that all things are dirty that come from the far east. And yet that is not applicable in this case. The fig has always been a great factor in the life of the easterner, and its important place in the life of the nations is evidenced by the illuminating references that are frequently made to it in the pages of Holy Writ. Great care is exercised that it may be packed sweet and clean and the westerner may well dismiss from his mind all thoughts of uncleanliness when thinking of this fruit. Maybe some day some traveler from the far east will explain how welcome was the flesh of the fig to him, as he sat at rest under the spreading palm after a tiresome journey over the blistering desert or plain.

He would partake probably of what is called in this country, the Eleme fig. These are large, and hand picked, and are sold to the retailer at the present time at prices ranging from 8 to 12 cents, according to size. These are packed in small boxes and are called "Elemes," the Turkish word for hand picked.

Then there are the other more ordinary grades which come packed in bags, mats and tapnets and which are lower in price. In gathering these a sheet is held under the tree and the branches shaken to make the ripe fruit fall. A bruised fig is not fit for curing. A bath of strong potash lye is prepared and when boiling hot, the figs are dipped into it by means of a wicker basket for the space of two minutes, and then again dipped in clear water. After dripping, they are ready for drying, either in the sun, or in ovens or machines.

The fig is a native of the Mediterranean region, but is now grown in all warm countries. There are about three hundred varieties—green, white, yellow, brown and black. The fig tree grows 15 to 30 feet high with dark green leaves, rough above and downy beneath. The tree bears fruit in June and September with a later imperfect crop in December.

Figs are medicinally, a mild laxative. The pulp of the fig contains over 60 per cent. of sugar, and three pounds of fresh figs are required to yield one pound of dried fruit.

The cheaper kind are commercially known as "naturals." They are liable to be affected with "fig smut," a reproductive parasite which commences work in the interior of the fruit and soon converts the whole into a sooty mass. However, more care is being taken yearly in the preparation of this fruit, and the quality of the cheaper figs is gradually improving.

SODA-CRYSTALS (WASHING SODA)

Foreign Soda Crystals—and some of English manufacture—are being extensively offered for sale in this country which are grossly adulterated with Glauber-Salts (Sulphate of Soda), a cheap product which is not only entirely useless for washing purposes, but is even likely to injure the fabrics with which it comes in contact. The Adulterated Soda-Crystals, although nominally lower in price than BRUNNER MOND'S PURE SODA CRYSTALS, are in reality much dearer owing to the large quantity of useless and injurious matter which they contain.

The First Step in the Distribution of Goods is to Get Them ON the Dealer's Shelves; the next step is to get them OFF. To try to get them OFF before you get them ON is contrary to sound business principles.

Once the goods of a manufacturer have secured a place on the dealer's shelves, the more assistance that manufacturer can render the dealer in getting them into the homes of consumers, the greater will be the ultimate results. The Canadian retail dealer is a salesman capable of both creating demand for worthy goods and increasing the demand for staples. That's why his interest in a particular article is a valuable asset to the manufacturer of that article.

It has been proven by many manufacturers that one of the best methods for obtaining the dealer's interest is talking to him regularly through his trade paper—the paper out of which he makes HARD CASH and the one on which he can rely.

The Canadian Grocer is such a paper. Would you like absolute proof of this?

DO NOT GAMBLE WITH QUALITY

IT is the Quality of a Product that is interesting your trade more and more every day, but if you are willing to take a gambler's chance and stock a product just because it is a few cents cheaper than the standard Product of Quality, you will be the loser in the long run.

ON the other hand, if you will just pause to consider this question of quality and then use your own good judgment, you will arrive at the Only Conclusion, that

"Just as Good" Means Absolutely Not as Good!

You can pay a competitor no greater compliment than by comparing the worth of your goods with his, and likewise you can offer a woman no greater insult than by confronting her with something "Just as good" when she knows exactly what she wants and has come to your store to get it.

Let us not go back to the dark ages of Trade Deceit, friend, but rather let us keep on the sunny side of a woman's good-will. It pays to give a customer exactly what is asked for and with no cross looks. "Just as Good" means absolutely not so good and the whole world knows it!

Give them what they ask for!

The "Thistle" Brand of Fish. Frequently the ever-increasing demand for Haddies, Kippered Herring and Herring in Tomato Sauce, packed under the "Thistle" label, exceeds our ability to supply all. This is an eloquent tribute to quality, friends!

Griffin & Skelley's Asparagus As rich, delicate and toothsome as if you had stepped outside in the early morning hours and from your cherished garden cut with your own hands the tender stalks. Grown on private beds on the Sacramento River, whose location is unsurpassed for producing matchless quality.

Macaroni made by P. Codou As tender as a baby's skin—clean as the proverbial whistle. Likewise could we honestly describe the vermicelli and fancy pastes that come from that famous maker "Codou."

PINEAPPLE PIE.

Empty a can of Simcoe Grated Pineapple into dish. Beat the yolks of two eggs, add to them a teaspoonful of butter rubbed smooth with a cup of sugar, stir in a cup of milk and beat in the grated pineapple. Pour immediately into an open crust and bake in a moderate oven. When done, spread with meringue made by beating the white of an egg stiff with a tablespoonful of powdered sugar. Return to the oven long enough to brown lightly.

PINEAPPLE AND PEACH GLACES.

Drain the liquor from a can of Simcoe Peaches. Chop fine and empty into a dish with a can of Simcoe Shredded Pineapple. Cover with a cup of granulated sugar. Stand for an hour, and pour over them the liquor drained from the fruits and enough water to make a full pint-and-a-half of liquid. If not sweet enough, add sugar. Stir in the juice of a lemon, and the unbeaten white of an egg, and freeze.

Action All Along the Line!

Biscuit business is booming for the dealer who is pushing McCormick's "Maple Leaf" and "Lemon Cream" Biscuits.

The advertising and the quality of the goods have created a demand greater than we hoped for and it has taken some hustling on our part to satisfy everybody. But now that we have caught up, we invite every dealer to "come in" and make new friends and steady customers by putting in a supply of each kind.

These two tempting, fairy-like sandwiches have a charm wholly their own, and are so delicately fragile and delicious in flavor that they are fast taking the place of heavy desserts.

CANADIAN GROCERY TRADE NOTICE

FUSSELL'S CREAM

BETTER THAN DEVONSHIRE CREAM

The Canadian Law now requires CREAM to be so labelled, to contain not less than 18 per cent. of milk fat and to be quite free from preservatives or thickening matter. We have for many years been recognized throughout the markets of the world as by far the largest packers of REAL CREAM under our celebrated "GOLDEN BUTTERFLY" brand (registered). This article IS VERY RICH IN MILK FAT, IS PERFECTLY PURE and in every way complies with the requirements of the Inland Revenue at Ottawa, by whom our samples have been favourably reported upon. Remember it is not condensed nor is it a substitute, it is just PURE RICH THICK CREAM in its truest sense—BETTER THAN DEVONSHIRE CREAM. It is being WELL advertised in the press, and is being most favorably reported on by the trade.

Prices, samples, advertising material and full particulars of our various packings can be obtained from any of the below mentioned addresses:—

The W H. ESCOTT CO., 137 Bannatyne Avenue East, Winnipeg, for Manitoba and Saskatchewan.
The HARRY HORNE CO., 309 King Street West, Toronto, for Ontario.

You show good judgment when you recommend

Shirriff's True Vanilla, for your customers would prefere to use Shirriff's if they realized its superiority over extracts that are Vanilla in name only. After they have flavored their sauces, puddings and cakes with Shirriff's True Vanilla they will feel very grateful towards you indeed.

Shirriff's True Vanilla is the REAL thing. It is made from the finest Mexican first-quality Vanilla beans. It is aged until its strength surpasses all others. Shirriff's has a wonderful delicacy of flavor and richness—a rare bouquet. Every bottle you sell of brings you a good profit—the same holds true on each and every one of the more than ninety flavourings which comprise the line of Shirriff's Extracts. "BELIEFS—

Ancient and Modern"

The unqualified success of "SALADA" has been achieved unhampered by trade traditions, and with a scanty reverence for "ruts," but with a deep-rooted conviction in the doctrine of "quality" first, last, and all the time, as the main factor for success.

The sales have now passed the 23,000,000 Packets per Annum Mark.

We leave it to you as to whether we were right in our convictions.

Recall to your memory how many of our competitors have fallen by the way-side through thinking otherwise.

Where Canada Stands in Coffee Trade

Peculiar State of Affairs in World Crop—Big Sale for April—How Canadian Demand Increased From Insignificance to Splendid Total—How Growth Came About—The Possibilities for the Future.

In a cool corner of the wide-spreading verandah of his bungalow many a Brazilian planter is meditating at this moment on the amount of money he will realize on his crop of coffee. In the mirror of fancy each one looks cheerful.

In the privacy of his office many a coffee broker speculates at his desk on the day when the jobber—his customer—will be forced to re-enter the market. And, as he thinks, he smiles.

That, roughly speaking is the world situation; the planter gleefully rubbing his hands in anticipation of larger returns; the broker, building castles on the probability of jobbers having to buy on a rising market. The Canadian position is somewhat different.

Here the dark shadow of the Brazilian planter is not cast. Brokers are not worrying much whether or not he realizes his anticipated profits. The invisible supply is the one weighty factor. This consists of the stocks held by wholesalers all over the country. The best posted broker in the trade cannot predicate with any certainty the stocks withdrawn from the visible supply and now lying in the warehouses, but there are some who believe that they are not large enough to suffice for more than another two months, and that there then will come a great rush to market to replenish stores. But no one knows what is working in the mind of the wholesaler—the man who gives to the retail dealer his supply of coffee. He is not telling whether he has sufficient holdings to carry him for four months, or only for two. He is saying nothing, and every now and then, he sends into the big importer an order for a meagre consignment. He is buying only from hand to mouth and seems content. What has he got; is the one question; what is he waiting for, is another. The answers would decide the market, but the answer is not forthcoming.

Big Coffee Sale.

On April 1st next, 600,000 bags of Brazil coffee will be sold. The distribution will be as follows:—New York, about 300,000 bags; Hamburg and Bremen, 125,000; Havre [illegible] Marseilles 5,000; Antwerp, 25,000; Rotterdam, 20,000; Trieste, 12,500. This coffee will be disposed of at the best price it will bring. On April 22nd, three weeks later, another 600,000 bags will go on the market. These, however, are to be sold at a limited price,—in this case, not less than 75 francs, on a basis of "good average Havre types, for spot coffee." The equivalent of 75 francs on the good average Havre basis is about 13.83 cents for Santos No. 4, and 13.65 cents for Santos No. 5. According to an official cable, which George Musson, Sr., of Musson & Co., Toronto, received recently, announcing the sale, the reason for the setting of the limited price for the second half of the 1,200,000 lot was that the valorization committee have a firm offer on that basis for all of the 600,000 bags, remaining unsold at that price on the 22nd of April next.

What Jobber Awaits.

Now it is just possible the Canadian jobber is awaiting the verdict of the world on that large supply of valorization coffee before he commits himself to any heavy purchasing. Apart from that the sale will not affect him directly because, as will be noticed by a moment's consideration of the ports at which this coffee is to be unloaded, the holding countries will be the United States, France, Germany, Holland and Austria, with the first three far in the lead in point of bulk. On coffee from any of these countries, the Canadian importer would have to pay a duty of 10 per cent. so, for that reason the sale will have no direct effect. But the selling of that stock may establish a new market price. However, it is not even known whether the Canadian jobber can stay out of the market long enough to see the result.

Any big broker in Canada will tell you that to-day the market is dead. At the same time he will add that the demand is constantly increasing. More and more coffee is being bought every day throughout the length and beadth of our land from retail dealers. With no purchasing of consequence by jobbers since last December is it not reasonable to assume that the staple is now approaching the fork in the road, and safe to predicate that something definite will result right speedily?

A Manufacturer's Opinion.

Let us turn for a moment to a survey of recent coffee history as given by a big manufacturer. Said he: "The crop of 1910 was, approximately, 14,500,000 bags, while the demand can be estimated to be at least capable of taking up 16,500,000 bags. As you see there is a shortage of 2,000,000 bags. Some place the demand higher by 1,500,000 bags. The situation in Canada is peculiar. The jobber has been out of the market for nearly three months and we have no means of finding out just what his, the invisible supply, is. Last October when Santos 4's were quoted at 10 cents he bought freely. Later on, in December, when the crop shortage had caused the price to rise to 12½ cents, he became a little frightened and bought more. Not a man has bought coffee since. Now generally speaking, the wholesaler keeps about four months ahead of his demand, but I believe the invisible supplies held in the warehouses of the wholesale dealers of Canada will not suffice to keep the retailers going for more than two months. Since December Santos 4's, for example, have gone up four cents a pound. That is a good reason why the wholesaler keeps out of the market it seems, and it is taken for granted he won't come in until he has to. It is also probable that when he does come in to buy it will be in a higher market. The world's supply is short; the demand is big, and growing bigger; which all seems to point to dearer coffee. In Canada there will be little effect, directly, from the sale of 1,200,000 bags of valorization coffee in April. None of it will be sold in Great Britain or Canada, but the manner in which the world absorbs it will have an effect upon the trade in Canada. The market cannot be fixed here until the wholesaler shows his hand."

Growth of Canadian Trade.

Primarily the Canadian was not a coffee-drinker, and it is interesting to trace the growth of the trade in this country. The people of German and Dutch descent formed the nucleus. These used to buy their Rios and Santos from the retailer green and roast it themselves Gradually the demand widened, and kept on growing with every foreigner that came to our shores, because the man from other lands is generally a coffee drinker. The trade kept on increasing until now it has reached a consumption of one pound and a quarter per head of population, representing at the present, on a population of 7,500,000, an annual consumption of 9,875,000 pounds. The United States people who, every year pour into our western plains are adding to the demand. In fact it is now a moot question whether the coffee houses of the west are not greater than those in the east. But with all that our coffee-drinking is insignificant beside the tremendous demand of the Dutch and Americans. In the latter country it is estimated that the consumption is more than 14 pounds per head of population, and that it is still growing.

Call for Good Coffee.

That, however, is hardly the point. The demand in Canada is thriving. It is not moreover for cheap coarse coffee that the people call; it is for the higher grades of mild smooth stock. So that the coffee trade of to-day is worth tremendously more than that of a few years ago. Even the dealer in the counties where the German strain is strong, has felt the change. The sturdy stolid citizen from the Fatherland, who once was devoted to his coarse Rio, bought green in the store and roasted in his oven at home, has turned his call over to better and more expensive goods. It was a natural evolution with him, and yet it served to show that people of Canada needed little urging to purchase high grade stock.

And even though the price of his drink is forced higher the Canadian is not going to stop his coffee supply. It seems probable the price will go up, unless something startling happens soon. The crop is short, and as the crops of the last few years have also not exceeded the demand, there can hardly be any great reserve stored anywhere. But if it does go up it will not be any great increase, and this the Canadian has become accustomed to for years. Coffee has come to stay, and every year is sure to show a greater demand. There are great possibilities for the trade, and Brazil, Colombia, Venezuela, Mexico, Guatemalo, Java, Sumatra, Central America, and Arabia—sun-kissed countries of the southern seas—are all sending their best to make the conquest sure.

Selling Talks to Swell Coffee Trade

Some Reflections on the Value of Studying Human Nature When Boosting of Coffee Sales is in View—Hints That May Be of Some Use in Your Own Case—Coffee Windows.

Drinking your beloved coffee in the morning Mr. Dealer, have you never felt called upon to declare to Mrs. Dealer: That talk about coffee being a harmful drug is all bosh.

Surely you have, for it is almost a fetish with most Canadian women to insist that coffee—the inspirator of the fagged brain—should not be drunk too often, meaning thereby that one cup a week is sufficient.

Didn't you think too, that you were perfectly justified in defending your coffee even from your wife? Didn't you FEEL, that the drink was not harmful, while it tasted most wonderfully good?

Well then why not take that breakfast table argument to the counter with you, when you are facing a customer who does NOT drink coffee. Why not arouse in her a desire for coffee through the simple channel of your own keen appreciation of it. It can be done. Be intelligent and tactful always, but convince her beyond the shadow of a doubt that YOU can drink coffee steadily without injury to your constitution; then enlarge upon its stimulative properties, and the battle is won. It isn't particularly hard, is it?

Where Sales are Sales.

That is one way to sell coffee, and it is only one sale. Let us assume for a moment you sold her a coffee you had been drinking but which was not quite good enough to meet her taste, even though she was but a beginner. You did not make the best of that sale, in fact you lost upon it, because very probably she would decide to quit coffee before she finished that one supply. But supposing you knew your customer and gauged to a nicety her required standard? You made a devotee of coffee, then. That was Salesmanship.

And again it is helpful in selling coffee for the retailer to be able to tell what a beautiful drink some particular blend of bean makes and how to make it. He isn't talking of possibilities there, he is stating a fact he himself has proved. Sometimes too, it is a good thing for a dealer to get from a customer, when she is good enough to tell him the coffee was good, the method she adopted in getting that result. That might prove valuable because some other woman may have made a failure of preparing the same coffee. It's better to be able to advise some new manner of boiling coffee when a customer comes in with a complaint than to say: Well, I don't see how that is, Mrs. So and So takes it and she likes it. Give a practical answer. It may be just what she is needing.

Coffee always is coffee and those who once commence its use will generally continue to do so unless there is some physical reason against it. And, in that event there will be no force in your arguments as far as that customer is concerned.

Some Selling Points.

These are some of the things to be borne in mind when coffee is to be sold. A consideration of them may be of value. But still there are tricks and tricks peculiar to the locality, that only the dealer knows anything about. There are some folks to whom you can enlarge on the advantages of getting coffee fresh every few days, ground in your own mill. Others again want only the blended ground, product in tins, while others call for the bean alone. The dealer knows how to handle these classes of customers. Now, this article is designed to help those merchants whose coffee trade is not large. It needs special attention and a lot of hard work but good results will follow in the wake of patient effort. Coffee will not build a trade in itself. If you want to prove the truth of this just stock it and let it lie, you won't find many even asking about it. But you can by individual calculated effort build up a remunerative trade, and your window will be one of your biggest assets. And handle good coffee even if you are compelled to stock up with a little of the coarser goods.

A Montreal Instance.

In a Montreal store the other day, there was a small but nicely arranged coffee display on the front counter. A customer entered and having given an order for a few groceries, the clerk enquired, Now, what about some coffee, Mrs. Customer? We have an excellent brand here, and picking up a package he dwelt upon its good points and told the customer just how it should be prepared in order to give the best flavor. As a result of the salesmanship of this clerk, a pound was purchased which probably will result in other sales.

New Brunswick Window.

A St. John, N.B. merchant made a striking display last week in one of his show windows by moving his electric coffee grinder into the window and surrounding with it with bags, filled and empty, and an attractive card, announcing—"Quality" Coffee, 33 cents per lb. The bottom and sides sides of the window were covered with white paper, while the bright red coffee mill and bags of the same shade, made a pretty contrast. Empty bags were tacked flat against the back and sides of the window, while the filled bags were placed on the floor of the window, below the mill which was raised about 12 or 15 inches. The change was only a temporary one but it made a very neat appearance and had the effect of drawing considerable attention to the coffee department of the store.

In an adjoining window, several dozen "stair whisks," with long handles were shown; a timely suggestion for the spring cleaning. A third window featured marmalade oranges. All had attractive cards of uniform size and lettering and they could not fail to be effective.

The window given in connection with this article also supplies an idea. It could be elaborated or changed to suit individual requirements and bring results. The suggestion in it is to show all classes of coffee. There are the beans in the foreground with the word "coffee" picked out in sugar. On either side of the mill are piles of cans while the ground coffee is seen pouring out of the mill. The show cards of course, give opportunity for originality to suit local needs.

Remember that quality in this, as in every other staple, is a strong selling point and that it keeps on selling for you.

There are stores, to reach which, you will go five blocks out of your way. Find out why you like them and apply the principle to your own store.

A Few Suggestions for the Grocery Trade

Veteran of the Counter Gives a Number of Little Things Which Have Returned Him Dividends in Practice—The Rejuvenation of Currants, Raisins, Prunes and Onions—Care of The Basement.

By J. M. Donovan.

Many are the tricks of the grocery business. Some of them are small, some of them are smaller, but nearly all of them, when practiced properly return dividends to the practicer.

To old grocers, who have gone through life gathering knowledge from bitter experience, this little chapter of recipes will hold nothing that is new or strange; to young men, starting in the "mill" with but little equipment, they may be of some value. Anyway I give them for what they are, and if anyone in carrying out their spirit should discover an advantage, then they shall have served their purpose.

To Rejuvenate Currants.

To make any priced currants look to be of a better quality, remove a portion of them to another box from the original case, rolling out all lumps between the hand while doing so; then make a mixture of two parts of dark molasses to one of water. Three tablespoonfuls of this mixture will suffice for a quantity filling an ordinary raisin box. Do two or three of these boxes at once; the results of this will surprise any one.

For prunes that are very dry and are becoming white, soak for a while in hot water mixing up occasionally until you feel them getting soft. Remove them from the water into a box, make a mixture as above for currants and scuffle it well through them. It will make them look like new with but a little labor.

For Shrivelled Raisins.

Raisins that are shrivelled and becoming sugary can be treated as the prunes, but they must not be left long in the water, and must be squeezed well and placed on a cloth for 2 or 3 hours. They can be left on the cloth over night when they will become as it were "fatter" then throw them into a pan or box and mix well through them a little corn syrup (the molasses being too dark for raisins); place back into their original box; do this a week or so before you need them as by that time they have more of their natural consistency.

Sprouted onions, after the bulb becomes soft, are a total loss, unless made use of in the following manner. Bed them in sand or sifted coal ashes placed in a shallow box and place in a locality where the sun shines some part of the day. If the dealer does this carefully he has an opportunity to make some profit on what might otherwise be a loss, as many of the onions throw out four or five sprouts.

Save your zinc lined tea chests (which have a covered end if properly opened) for rice, tapioca, beans, barley, etc., which will provide against loss from mice or rats. Sprinkle a little red pepper occasionally on the floor and on the shelving where flour and meals are kept and it will banish mice and rats from that quarter and save a lot of bother and expense.

Sprinkle slacked lime-dust around the cellars, under boards, boxes and barrels that are going to remain for a time. Also sprinkle slacked lime-dust on the bottom floor of your refrigerator. It will keep out the small red ants.

A pail of lime and water standing on the cellar floor will keep the cellar sweet and free from must.

Remove slats from your refrigerator in the fall on which the ice is kept. Leave same out during winter. Thoroughly wash drip-pan and dry and then smear over with good clean lard.

LOOK FOR CHEAPER EGGS AND POTATOES

W. C. Miller Expresses Opinion at Monthly Meeting of Toronto Retail Grocers' Association—The Question of Cheap Soap and How Hamilton Men are Solving It—A Five-Pin Tournament.

Toronto, March 23.—The spread of the cut price in the grocery trade of this city provided one of the chief topics of conversation at the regular monthly meeting of the Toronto Retail Grocers' Association in the Temple Building on Monday night.

President W. Miller, who occupied the chair, introduced the subject. In a moment the whole gathering warmed to the task and all the alleged bad phases of the so-called evil were freely bandied about. Soap was the principal item, but sundry jelly powders and marmalades also came in for passing attention.

J. C. Beaumont mentioned the names of several grocers, who, he said, were selling soap at 6 bars for a quarter, and other members presented similar testimony. President Miller then informed the meeting that a similar condition obtained over in Hamilton, but that, over there, the trade were lining up, and were trying to reach a mutual understanding. W. S. Fry then pointed out that certain soap makers were reducing the size of the bars to such an extent that some grades of imported goods were actually cheaper. This he thought should be taken up.

Methods of increasing the dealers' profit on various grocery items were also discussed, but no decision was arrived at.

The talk turning, President Miller said, anent eggs: "I had a country storekeeper come into my store the other day who wanted to know how much I paid for eggs. I didn't want to commit myself all at once."

"He told me," continued Mr. Miller, "that the commission men were offering only 16 cents, f.o.b. This means that eggs will be laid down in this city at 16½ to 16¾ cents a dozen, and it looks as though we are going to have cheaper eggs."

"I sold them for 28 cents on Saturday," broke in R. Matthews, "but they were country eggs." "So did I," said C. F. Thorne, "but I was offered some for 19 cents." "I paid 20 cents for mine," said the president, "but they came from the country and were worth it."

"I think potatoes are also going to be cheaper," continued Mr. Miller. "Good Delawares are being talked about, around 95c to $1.00." "I hope they do get cheaper," said a member.

It was decided on motion of R. Davies to hold a five-pin tournament in April. Mr. Davies' scheme would make all the contestants "scratch" men, the fee $1.00 per member. It was his desire to hold the meet on the first Thursday in April, but the meeting seemed to favor leaving the matters of date and entries to the executive.

Secretary Thorne was instructed to send a letter of condolence to the widow of the late F. S. Roberts, one of the veterans of the Association.

W. S. Fry was welcomed to the Association and gave a brief speech in reply. The names of two other grocers were proposed for membership.

Arrangements were completed for the annual banquet of the association which was held in the St. Charles last night, and a report of which will be given in The Grocer of next week.

One of Port Arthur's Grocery Stores

Port Arthur, March 23.—The illustration given below shows the interior of a store that is a monument to ambitious energy, intelligently applied. This city, with her twin, Fort William, can give many an example where abundant reward has followed the perseverance of her citizens, but probably in none of them would the case be so complete as this one.

Six years ago James D. Campbell and George Gibbon were grocery clerks in this city. Fired with ambition and the desire to get on, they both had been frugal, and on coming one day to count their resources found they had money, sufficient in their opinion, to venture into business for themselves. They did so. Two doors to the south of the store shown they established their first business. They succeeded. As year followed year their business grew until a twelvemonth ago they found themselves in possession of money enough to buy the block containing their present store, which they did.

This establishment, as evidenced by the cut below, is most commodious. The main floor measures 90x20 feet, and is well lighted. Below stairs there is a basement clean, and dry, 90 feet long and 42 feet wide. Here is stored the stock they use in the retail and jobbing trade. The members of the firm are classified as keen buyers and many have been the times, according to those in touch with them, when good judgment has added considerably to the firm's bank account, Campbell & Gibbon are said to have plenty of capital, and their credit is good. Because of these things the firm has often been enabled to take advantage of favorable swings in the markets.

A strong feature about the business of this firm is that it is conducted on a regular steady profit basis. Competition has been of the keenest, but it is said of Campbell & Gibbon that never have they condescended to cut prices to hold their trade. They held to this principle because firmly convinced the public is not unwilling to allow the merchant a reasonable profit provided the service and treatment that dealer accords is good.

Port Arthur and the district round about is making rapid progress, but such merchants as Campbell & Gibbon will always keep abreast of the times. Last year their turn-over was in the neighborhood of sixty thousand dollars.

INTERIOR VIEW OF CHEERFUL PORT ARTHUR STORE.

There doesn't seem to be any waste space in this establishment, and note how neat and clean everything in it appears. Observe the silent salesmen, cash register and computing scale. The metallic ceiling also adds brightness to the whole interior.

Real Hints for Retail Advertisers

Things the Retailer Might Do Well to Consider—Place Held by Location of Store in Campaign—Tremendous Importance of Keeping Everlastingly at It, Once Started—Value of Being Able to Speak Truth.

By Henry Johnson, Jr.

I am in receipt of a note asking me: "Can you tell me through your columns or otherwise what you recommend in the way of advertising for corner grocery and market?"

Such a question covers the whole ground of business structure and goes into greater details than my friend probably thought of when he wrote. It would have been easier had he stated whether his store is new or old-established; whether he has long been located in his present stand or is new to the location: and how much he wants to spend regularly for his printed matter. I differentiate printed matter from advertising, or rather, set it aside by itself, because, as I shall hope to show later on, that is only a part of the campaign.

Advertising Complex.

Advertising is a much more complex matter than most grocers think. Many believe that, when they print a few circulars or a "card" in the paper and pay the bill, therefore they have advertised. Such is not the case. They have no more advertised than the summer boarder who hoes a few hills of potatoes for pastime has farmed. And I might say at the beginning that, unless my friend is ready to build up his business on a basis of true advertising, he might better let it alone entirely and keep his money. Which is not saying, on the other hand, that the proper way need be expensive, for it can be just as expensive or economical in expenditure as any man's resources may render desirable or necessary.

Spirit of Personality.

Advertising is the public policy of any business. To a certain extent we all advertise. Many who never advertise by the use of printers' ink advertise much better and more forcibly than many others who spend large sums for printed publicity. To advertise successfully and profitably a grocer must run the spirit of his own personality into every detail of what his business says, or does. He must offer his wares largely, or in limited circles, in a straight-forward manner, and then—most important point—he must back up every assertion made in his own store by his own methods. Coming right down to it, advertising is the whole business structure. Maybe I can do better in the way of making my meaning clear by getting down to facts.

The Endless Chain.

This is a "corner grocer." There's an excellent point to start with. Is it central? Do the principal thoroughfares of the town lead to it or toward it? In this case, there is an excellent opportunity to say: "All Roads Lead to Smith's," and, if all roads lead there, 'tis well to think what good things can be had at the end of the journey; which, again, will presuppose good service in the handling of these things; also, naturally, fair prices and prompt delivery. You will see that the entire argument holds together so logically that we must work carefully so we may lead the customer on to find one good thing following another until she not only comes, but sees and is thereafter ours.

Sequel of Advertising.

But suppose my friend's store is on a side street, or a corner somewhat out of the beaten track. What then is the advantage of the "corner?" Is it readily reached by those who find it inconvenient to go down town? and, after they get there, do they find things so good that they need go no further? and, after that, do you deliver so much more promptly because of your proximity that they do not miss the big, down town stores? All these points can be made excellent ammunition in your advertising, provided, always that you do just as you say, Your money spent advertising will work you positive harm if, after customers respond to your invitation to call, they find you sitting indifferently on the counter, hardly willing to bestir yourself when they ask for goods. An advertiser is expected to be a hustler. If he's not, he'd better not try to advertise.

Keep Pounding Away.

Now, what has my friend determined he can afford to spend. For let me say to him one thing as impressively as I may; that he can look for no permanent success as an advertiser unless he is prepared to set aside an appropriation of so much per week which he will spend continually and forever. Let him make it small as need be to start with, feeling sure that he is able to invest that much every week. Then let him go on unflinchingly spending that sum each week, through thick and thin, never planning to change the amount until such time as he can INCREASE IT. Continuity is the main thing in publicity—next, of course, to knowing your business, doing the square thing and telling about it right.

I have been in business here for 32 years. I have run my business alone for over 17 years. The business has been advertised more or less continually for 54 years. Yet recently the advertising was dropped for six months. I started it again ten weeks ago, spending $8.50 per week on my newspaper ads, and the effect is just beginning to be felt. This shows me, as I knew before I started the campaign, that continuity gives nearly all the value to printed publicity.

How to Advertise.

What form my friend's advertising shall take is a matter about which we must take thought. If he's centrally located and has a clientele who read the daily papers, he can use space in papers to advantage. If his is a "neighborhood" store, he must use circulars and letters, together with personal solicitation. His personal solicitation must be by telephone, of course, for the merchant must never be away from his place of business. It is the greatest mistake in the world for a man to think anything important enough to take him out of his store. But whatever form it takes, let it be CONTINUOUS, UNREMITTING, EVERLASTING. Let no thing interfere with its continual issue, every week, without any chance of failure. Neglect or put off some other things, defer other jobs, but let the ad. be written and carefully printed just at properly stated intervals, "if the heavens fall."

Monday Bargains.

I work special sales at reduced prices for Monday only. This because I have always found plenty of business to attend to at the end of the week. My effort has been to bring business my way on Monday, which is usually the slow day, and I figured that the advertising would eventually fetch enough orders to run us well over Monday into Tuesday, that Wednesday would care for itself and that the latter end of the week would be stimulated by the business of the former end. Such has been my experience. People do come, if you induce them to come with special prices on certain limited days. The same rent, the same help, the same light, fuel and insurance, will care for twice the trade properly distributed evenly throughout the week. And, as things grow, all you have in the way of added expense is help—all the other factors remain stationary.

Have the Stock.

To plan this way makes a merchant alert, enterprising, keen. He knows how to buy better and sell better. He knows how to offer goods attractively. He knows how to speak convincingly, because he believes it himself. A lady called at my store last fall on a Saturday morning. She wanted a few peaches—not a basket. I happened in the rush to be outside by the fruit display and heard her ask for the peaches. I grabbed a basket containing seven peaches, picked over from Friday, and selling regularly at 30 cents per dozen. One or two were slightly bruised. I said: "Here's what you want; just the nicest, few delicious peaches you're looking for. Ten cents." She bought and I hurried on. Later she came to my desk where I was taking 'phone orders "on the wing," and said: "I wish I could talk my wares the way you can yours. Mr. Johnson." I looked up at her with a smile and said; "Mrs. Bennet, it's all on the principle that 'THE TRUTH WILL PREVAIL.' It's no trick to talk goods when you have them of the right sort."

And there is the keynote of advertising. Have the stock; have the right prices and the service; tell about them. That is the whole tale. If my friend will send me some details, I shall take pleasure in definitely helping him along."

PUBLISHED EVERY FRIDAY

COUNTED THE FISH.

Checking up invoices carefully is a trait in a retailer to be commended. Occasionally incidents come to light to prove the wisdom of the precaution.

Not long ago a dealer received a barrel of mackerel, guaranteed on the invoice as containing 325 fish. In accordance with his policy this grocer counted the contents of the barrel. It contained only 298, or 27 less than the invoice called for. Had he "gone it blind," and retailed the mackerel at the price he had fixed in his mind before the counting, that dealer would have lost $2.70 on the consignment.

It wasn't much, but it prevented a little leak and it is the little leaks that often lead to disaster. History records on many a page, how great catastrophes which occurred solely because some one neglected to remedy the small beginnings—the little things. Most things grow.

The Grocer is not insinuating that skippers are dishonest and that retailers need exercise constant vigilance to prevent themselves being "trimmed." But men make mistakes and the dealer by checking up the invoices every time provides a safeguard against himself being made the victim of the mistakes.

THE WINDOW NEGLECTED.

No retail dealer can hope to really succeed until he comes to a sense of appreciation of his display windows. It is idle for anyone to argue that the space enclosed by the plate glass window is not valuable. It is, real valuable; and yet there are a few merchants who fail to realize what the windows are for, and who deliberately fill them with the most uninteresting articles in their stock, in such a manner as to convey the impression that the storage of the goods was the only result sought.

There is some excuse for the country merchant, who, does not have a small army of interested spectators passing his store every day, if he does not dress his windows with an eye single to the selling of his goods, and yet with some striving after an artistic effect. There is none for the city dealer. In the larger centres men trained as window artists in all lines of endeavor, strive almost daily to outdo each other in putting forth displays that will catch the eye of the great public and draw customers to the counters within. The value of the window is constantly pressed upon him.

In the west end of Toronto, where usually one expects to find merchants using modern equipment and making fullest use of every advantage in floor and window space, location, and so on, there was to be seen the other day a window piled high with full bags of charcoal, the tied ends facing the street. The goods were piled so high as to shut out completely any view of the store within.

That merchant was NOT realizing on his window. The incident might have passed unnoticed had it not been that some little time ago the SAME window offered to public view a pile of apples, dumped most carelessly out of a barrel or bag.

THE EDITOR AND MAIL ORDER BUSINESS.

Usually when the inroads of the mail order houses upon the country trade comes up for discussion, the grocer in the smaller towns develops a tendency to attribute the whole blame to someone, anyone, rather than himself. He is unwilling to accept even a small share of the responsibility.

Editors of country weekly newspapers, and sometimes those in charge of the small dailies, are often made the butt of the dealer's invective, and are described as a "useless, boneless, money-grabbing lot."

It is always a lot easier to blame some one else for an undesirable state of affairs but it is not always fair to do so. In the case of the editor, the dealer will generally find him a man ready at all times, even at considerable cost to himself, to advance the interests of the community in which he labors.

These traits of human nature were aptly illustrated in a little incident which developed at a recent meeting of the Board of Trade at Sackville, N.B. An editor who was present informed the meeting that he had, with the idea of helping the merchants of the town, thrown open the columns of his paper at a low rate that the dealers could meet the competition of the department stores. The reception he received was not such as to induce him to err on that side of generosity again. The merchants would not use the space he offered on such liberal terms. They were prone to complain and loath to take advantage of any scheme designed to help them.

Mr. Dealer, the business of the Mail Order House is sure to expand as the population of the country increases. The voicing of reasonless, vindictive, general complaints, will never help you to head it off. YOU must DO something, and do it QUICKLY. Stand on your own feet and meet that competition, as best you can, for, like the poor, you will have it always with you.

TRUST THE PEOPLE.

The tendency of almost every general manager of almost every great corporation to-day is to take the public into its confidence. It doesn't matter that the public has in great measure forced the thing upon him; the point is that it is here.

It is only a rehash of the advice of the wise old man, who said: "trust the people, and they'll trust you;" it's only perhaps a breeze returned from the golden age; but it's here, and it's working.

Now if it is good for the big fellow to take the people into his confidence, it is good for the little fellow, in proportion. There are many ways of doing it. The dealer can do his talking through the newspaper, the dodger or through his window. He can evolve a policy that can be worked out systematically, a little at a time. He can talk about his goods—tell how much care he exercises that only the best goes on his shelves. He can tell how keenly he feels on the question of sanitary methods in his establishment.

There are, in fact, any number of things he can talk about. Any dealer who wants to use the suggestion can think out a list that would carry him around the year. It's a good idea—trust the people.

The delegates at the R.M.A. convention in Guelph last week endorsed a resolution requesting the Dominion officers of the association to get out a pamphlet setting forth the facts and arguments of the dealers' case against the mail order houses. It was suggested that these pamphlets should be turned over at the net cost price to the dealer, who, in turn would distribute them to his customers. There are possibilities in the ideas.

Practical Methods of Retail Stores

Montreal Firm Makes Business by Advertising Specialties—Care of Awning Proves Profitable—Dresden Dealer Opens New Department—Edmonton Retailer on Catalogues—Consideration of Customers—Building Business on Service.

Advertise Specialties.

Montreal, March 23.—Fraser, Viger & Company, Limited, of this city, claim to have achieved considerable success by confining their advertising to specialties.

They have been running ads. two columns wide in some of the local papers which show three distinct branches only.

First comes the announcement that they are entering the sixth week of an annual sale of seedless California oranges. The point is made of the fruit being much nicer and riper than when the sale opened. Next comes a long list of 25 cent. specialties covering such goods as tea, coffee, salmon, canned goods, cheese, vermicilli, and spaghetti, jelly powders, green goods, extracts, jams, nuts, marmalade, honey, candies, biscuits, and so on. They also announce that they have fresh every morning strawberries, mushrooms, lettuce and celery, sweet potatoes, grape fruit and other dainties.

The ad. is so arranged as to make reading and understanding easy. Everything is arranged in concise form so that the reader can pick out at a glance just what is wanted.

A Stitch in Time.

Vancouver, B. C., March 23.—"A stitch in time saves nine," is as true in the grocery business as any other, and particularly so in regard to fixtures around the store and the store itself," said a local merchant recently.

"A practical demonstration of this was made to me the other day. My neighbor and I both purchased a new awning for our stores, at the time, three years ago. Last fall during a heavy wind storm, the end piece on each awning was ripped about a foot. When the wind abated I sewed up the rip in my awning and made it as sound as ever. My neighbor neglected to do so. During a strong wind last week, the foot rip in his awning was extended around to the front, making repair almost impossible. I expect he will have to buy a new awning next year, while mine looks as if it would stand at least three years longer."

Opened Milk Department.

Dresden, Ont., March 23.—E. B. Madden of this place is one of those who believe that anything coming under the caption of table supply is within the legitimate province of the grocer. He has by pushing his conviction secured, he says, a measure of success that otherwise would probably not have come to him.

Recently he made a radical departure from the beaten path of Dresden trade by introducing a milk department in connection with his regular grocery business. When the idea came to him he entered into an arrangement with a nearby farmer whereby he secured a daily supply of pure wholesome milk. Cleanliness was insisted upon and the milk was to come to him in the regular pint and quart bottles.

Under the terms of the contract the farmer takes back all unsold milk each morning when he brings in his load, thus ensuring fresh milk to the customer and absolutely safeguarding the grocer against loss in the venture. Mr. Madden delivers milk to his customers only when it can go with an order of goods. For this reason he says he secures a good many orders for general groceries which otherwise might pass the door because people want the country milk, and buy the other goods to have it delivered.

Catalogues on Counter.

Edmonton, Alta., March 23.—"I always make it a strong point in my advertising," observed an Alberta country merchant the other day, "to impress the fact upon the people in this town that I can sell just as cheaply as can the big mail order houses in the city. This is not idle boasting, for I guarantee to sell goods at prices as low, quality considered, as any mail order house in this province."

"I never try to draw trade from customers by advocating loyalty to the town" he continued. "That is, I think of no value in keeping trade at home, at least when introduced by the merchant. It leaves the impression on the people that your goods are priced higher than are those of the mail order houses and that you are employing this method of getting their trade, so that instead of getting trade, it is more likely to work in the opposite direction."

"A method which I employ, and which I believe helps in convincing customers that we do not fear mail order competition," he continued, "is to leave the catalogue of a couple of those big concerns on the counter where customers may inspect them. "Sometimes on the outside I will paste a note 'we guarantee to give equal value on any article in this catalogue.'

The first thing in starting a campaign against the mail order evil, is for the merchant to thoroughly convince himself that his prices are as low as those in the catalogue. This is, no doubt, true in almost every store, where business is being conducted along proper lines.

Consideration of Customers.

Brandon, Man., March 23.—Consideration of the little things that go to make up the comfort of customers has resulted, it is said, in a grocer of this place extending his trade considerably with the farmers.

"It was borne in upon him last summer that he was getting only a small proportion of the farmers' patronage. He cast about for a reason. His investigations led him to the discovery that the trade he desired to secure gravitated to a nearby street, where ready at hand, there was ample accommodation for horses, and room where the "rigs" could stand while the occupants made their purchases. During the summer the grocer did nothing, but in the early fall he had erected a large shed. To all the farmers of the surrounding country he sent out a circular drawing attention to the shed, and to the fact that they were free to use it at all times. The circular also bore an attractive list of prices for staple goods.

The response of the farmers, was most cordial. It is said now that his trade has grown and that he has expressed himself as entirely satisfied with his investment.

Service His Watchword.

Toronto, March 23.—A young man with limited means, opened a store, a short time ago in a district chiefly populated by well-to-do people. It had always been taken for granted, in the trade, that when the residents of this locality desired goods they sent down town for them to one of the big establishments.

Speaking to him the other day, he said: "I found business here a great deal better than I had expected and already I have no doubt as to the future. GOOD SERVICE is my first thought always for it is my belief that the residents of this locality will deal right here if they are treated fairly and are not kept waiting too long for their goods."

This dealer had had his telephone number inserted in the check-printing device of his cash register, and, as he handed the check to a patron at the conclusion of a sale, he always quite courteously drew attention to the fact that the number of his telephone was on that card, and that he would appreciate their phoning when in need of anything.

The man who places confidence in no one may avoid some disappointments but he will live a lonely and suspicious existence. The basis of all business is confidence.

QUEBEC MARKETS

POINTERS:—

Sugar—Firm, advance expected.

Dried Fruits—Quotations are high.

Montreal, Mar. 23rd.—The leading wholesale houses in the city report satisfactory conditions of trade, and there is unity in this regard, for not a discordant note of disappointment is heard. It is a very gratifying state of affairs and promises well for the entire year.

Sugar is on the high tide of trade just now and even with advancing prices the demand is heavy. This is somewhat unusual for this time of the year but the jobbers explain it by the present condition of the market. It is reported that retailers have advised buying owing to advancing markets and the run is still showing itself. Local jobbers state that the refineries have been behind with their deliveries, so heavy has been the demand. This is the general report showing that the tendency is general and that the total volume of the sugar trade has been at a high figure. Reports anticipate another advance and the market from a local standpoint is very firm. There is just the likelihood that this activity in buying may be followed by a slump but while it continues as at present there is nothing gained by looking for a reaction.

Owing to the scarcity of salted and pickled fish, the Lenten trade this year through the wholesale grocery houses has slumped badly. At the beginning of the season only a fraction of the required stocks could be secured and they were soon exhausted. This is a loss to the trade and may be more or less permanent as the tendency seems to turn more to fresh frozen lines. However, it is claimed by some of those in touch with demand that, if trade in fish shows a diminution it has been balanced by heavier demand in other lines.

One report states that some lines of jams are short, noticeably strawberry and raspberry. It is stated that it is next to impossible to secure stocks in these lines. The Canadian crop last year was short because there was not sufficient rain, whereas the Scottish crop was light on account of too much rain. At any rate one house reports a shortage of and at the same time says the demand is good.

There are interesting conditions to notice in dried fruits and canned goods. Otherwise there is no particular change to record this week.

Sugar.—Following last week's advance, sugar continues to show strength, Business has been brisk locally and refiners could hardly cope with the demand. Some state that the heavy demand is explained by the belief that prices were going higher and that the trade are beginning to be well supplied. Whatever the reasons may be, the demand has been good. The situation in the primary market seems to be strong. Local jobbers state that another advance is not unexpected, and some of them are looking for it.

Dried Fruits.— Generally speaking dried fruits are in small compass. Prunes are scarce, and as will be noticed by a glance at the accompanying quotations, are dear. Evaporated apples are limited in quantity. Raisins and currants are also in smaller quantity and the whole dried fruit market is strong and advancing. Already reports are received in regard to the growing crops. From Smyrna comes the news that the weather is having a deterrent effect on the crops and higher prices are expected. On the other hand the weather conditions in Greece are reported favorable to the growing crop. Demand for dried fruits is good.

CANNED GOODS

MONTREAL.—There is an extensive demand for imported canned peas. This has been assisted by the rather high prices ruling on Canadian canned goods. The imported variety, brought from Belgium for the most part, are quoted at $7.75 per hundred tins. It is stated that the trade in this line has been heavy of late. Canadian peas of the better qualities range from $1.15 to $1.25. Gallon apples are scarce and are quoted at from $3.20 to $3.50 a case. Even at that figure they are in fairly good demand but stocks are very light. There is nothing new in regard to tomatoes. It is claimed that the situation would have been more acute had not Ontario dealers imported stocks from the United States. It is believed that the supply is sufficient for all requirements but that there will be no surplus at the end of the season. The situation, it is claimed, was relieved by these importations. Canned goods are, altogether, in good demand now, but jobbers look for better conditions in the near future, for the reason that the supplies purchased by many retailers throughout the country last autumn are not yet exhausted, but that it is only a short time until these grocers will begin to replenish their stocks.

TORONTO.—There is practically no change in canned goods since last week. Prices remain at about the same level with a normal trade passing, some firms noting an increase in the sales of canned fish and fruits. In peas and tomatoes, sales are not brisk, high prices having evidently curtailed consumption, while retailers are buying for immediate needs only. The fact that tomatoes can be brought in from United States markets and sold at present quotations will likely keep prices from going to any excessive limit. Some firms report that on account of the high price of gallon apples, sales have not reached the volume of other years.

POINTERS:—

Sugar—Strong, advance probable.
Evaps—Prices firmer.
Dried Fruits—Strength continues.

Toronto, Mar. 23.—Raw sugar has been steadily advancing, and a further upward movement in refined is not unexpected. The speculators seem to have the situation well in hand, for the time, and it looks as if refiners would have to get supplies. It is felt by some that a further advance may take place at any time. But the large European sugar crop has to be taken into consideration. The trade in sugar during he past month has been large and even at the present time is of considerable volume.

All lines of dried fruits continue strong with stocks of many lines notably light. These lines that are in fair supply are balanced up by shortage in others, so that strength is well maintained throughout the whole list. Prunes and evaporated apples are in small compass, with apparently no chance for improvement until the new crop. Candied peels are higher in the primary markets, reflecting some firmness in local prices.

It looked like a higher market in beans for a time, but recent arrivals have been heavier and the firmness is not so noticeable. Last year, prices advanced in the spring and the opinion has been expressed that farmers are this year holding off for higher prices. Differences of opinion prevail as to the amount of beans in the hands of the farmer.

The grocery trade on the whole continues normal. With the approach of spring, an improvement in trade is looked for in soaps, cleansers, starches and similar lines, but there will likely be no marked increase in demand until about the middle of next month.

Sugar.—Up to the time of writing no further change has taken place in refined, Toronto quotations being $4.60, but the raw sugar situation seems to be gradually growing stronger and further advances in price are looked for by some. European beet sugar has now reached the highest point in the campaign with 10s 8¼d being quoted, which is equal to 4.25 duty paid New York, while Cubas are quoted at 3.92. Sales to speculators for May shipment are reported at 3.95, indicating their confidence in near future prices. Java sugars which many expected might come in with lower quotations and break the market, have sold at ruling prices, and it now appears as if speculators had the situation well in control, at least for the present. One dealer said, "locally, it looks like one or two further advances with prices being maintained indefinitely, perhaps without a break for some time, but the fact should be remembered that when raws reach a high point, speculators may want to take their profits which may mean a reaction. However, nothing is certain in sugar, but a great deal depends on how well the speculator handles the crop."

Syrups and Molasses.—Trade in table syrup is favorable. Some increase was noticed of late in the movement of old maple syrup but the arrival of the new stock on the market will restrict its sale somewhat. The molasses situation shows no change with prices moderately steady.

Dried Fruits.—The market for dried fruits continues strong, with stocks gradually growing lighter and prices firming up. Down through the whole list there is not a single line that shows any break in the firmness, noticeable for some time back, and no improvement can be looked for in the situation until the new crop arrives. Peaches are in larger supply proportionately than most of the other lines, but this is balanced, by the scarcity of other lines, particularly prunes, in which the situation is gradually growing more acute. Cooking figs are going out more freely, being the only low priced fruit on the market. Currants, although trade locally is quiet, still continue strong.

Tea.—The better grades of tea are the least affected by market fluctuations. The advance in prices have been confined for the most part to the lower grade teas which have been steadily rising in value. One dealer said: "I do not expect to see a 25 cent tea on the market in a short time. Lower grade tea values have advanced so much that the present 25 cent teas are in most cases of much inferior quality to the 25 cent tea of a few years ago, for, as values advanced, lower grades had to be substituted to maintain prices at 25 cents. One particular tea, an extremely low grade which used to be bought a few years ago at 4½d, is now worth 8d, and many others have advanced nearly as much."

Coffee.—Prices of coffee show no change this week. A fair amount of trade is being done with an increasing demand for the better grades. Speculative coffee continues to waver in value but the statistical position is still strong. Willett and Gray's Journal says, "the available stock of Brazil coffee in New York to-day is only 590,000 bags, in New Orleans 125,000 bags, afloat from Santos and Rio for New York, and New Orleans 260,000 bags, making a total of 975,000 bags. In ordinary times this would barely suffice for sixty days' distribution. Looking at the impoverished condition of interior supplies, if normal trading returns, which it surely must do soon, these million bags would disappear from the American visible supply within two months. The country cannot continue to abstain from the markets and the above coffee or some other must be found for trade purposes."

Spices.—Trade in spices continues as usual for this time of the year. The second picking of cloves in Zanzibar is now coming on and it looks like a short crop. A feature which would indicate that prices of cloves and cream of tartar will eventually be higher is that primary quotations for these lines are at present higher than spot quotations, and the latter will have to be increased before the heavy season for sales of these lines arrives.

Rice and Tapioca.—A fair trade is passing at unchanged prices. The market in rice is steady. While the bulk of the trade in this country is confined to the lower grades of rice, dealers report an increase in the sales of higher grades within the last year or so, particularly Patna and Japan.

Beans.—Trade continues normal. The firmness in beans is not so noticeable this week. Offerings are more liberal, the farmers having evidently been holding for higher prices, as last spring beans made a big advance in price and holders evidently thought the same thing would occur this year. Differences of opinion exist as to the amount of beans in the country.

Seeds.—Wholesale seed men are already commencing to ship seeds out, as many retailers start showing these lines of seed early in the season, as by getting the farmer interested early in the season, they are more liable to get their trade. Timothy has reached the highest point in many years. Some retailers held off at the opening of the market, hoping that something might cause prices to break, but there has been nothing but strengthening of prices, with the outlook that the strength will be maintained. Supplies are short and timothy being a line which the farmer can hardly do without, everything points to strength. Being over twice the price of last year, it is no doubt that farmers will cut down their timothy needs as low as possible. Red clover and Alsike which show no great change from last year in price have been ordered freely this year on account of the high price of timothy, while alfalfa or lucerne is increasing in demand as the farmer begins to learn more about it.

MANITOBA MARKETS

POINTERS—
Canned Goods—Scarce and high.
Sugar—Still firm.
Apricots—Advanced.
Coffee.—Easier.
Evaporated Apples—Out of stock.

Winnipeg, March 23.—There is a great scarcity in the leading grocery stocks in the western country at the present time. Manufacturers and importers find it difficult to supply the demand of the wholesalers and jobbers, and merchants are clamoring for a wide range of stock. All the local wholesale houses are communicating for fresh supplies, and relief is expected in about ten days. The condition is not looked upon as serious, as it is believed there are plentiful stocks in crop centres, and it is just a matter of time in having transportations made. The cause of the scarcity is that merchants have been stocking heavily since the weather has been favorable, and wholesalers have been shipping very freely during the past few weeks since transportation became normal. Every item in the following list is more or less scarce in local wholesale houses.

This has also tended to strengthen the market and higher prices are being paid for many lines. It may well be expected, however, that the advances in most cases will only be temporary as prices will revert to normal figures as soon as supplies come to hand.

Sugar.—The price is still high on all sugars, and there is little hope of any reduction in the immediate future. The demand is excellent for all lines, and refineries everywhere seem to be taxed to supply the demand. As far as local merchants are concerned all are well stocked and only special orders are being received.

Dried Fruits.—Apricots have been advanced to 16½c. and peaches are strong at 10½c. The prune market is bare, and prices have been advanced considerably. This is one of the lines that is very much needed everywhere in the West, and wholesalers are endeavoring to purchase stocks in the crop centres. The ordering in apricots is very liberal despite the advanced price, and new stocks are coming in large quantities.

Syrup.—The market continues weak in syrup, and there has been no change for some time. The ordering is good, as syrup is always popular on the Western market. There is a large quantity of cane on the market in crop centres, and this is the sole reason of the weakness in the general market of the cane products. Prices are as follows:—2's $1.98, 5's $2.33, 10's $2.21, 20's $2.22.

NEW BRUNSWICK MARKETS.

St. John, N.B., March 23, 1911.—While there were few changes last week in the markets, prices are decidedly firm with an upward tendency. Some dealers are looking for higher prices in sugar and molasses to come almost any time. Flour is reported weak. Clear pork is a little lower but domestic mess is unchanged. American clear pork is now quoted at $22.50 to $24. There has been a pronounced advance in the price of olives. This is attributed to the fact the last year there was a shortness in the crop. Queen olives that are usually sold for $4.50 are now quoted at $5.75.

NOVA SCOTIA MARKETS.

Halifax, March 23.—Eggs are in good supply, but there is no demand. The prices quoted are 26 and 27 cents for fresh laid stock, but the dealers are not buying. The weather is now becoming very mild, which fact is favorable for laying, and a "break" in the market may come at anytime.

Butter prices are a shade firmer, with the demand fair. Some small tubs of fresh dairy are coming in, but the quantity is so small that it does not affect prices. It is believed there is still a lot of winter butter in the farmers' hands.

Potatoes are selling at one dollar per bushel in some parts of Nova Scotia and they are even scarce at that price. As the stocks held by the dealers are pretty well cleaned up, they are now importing from Maine and quite a few are coming from the Island. The price here rules about 80 cents per bushel, though for extra choice stock some of the jobbers are paying a little more.

There is a fairly good demand for green fruit, such as are on the markets. Outside of California seedless oranges, and lemons, the quality of the fruit is only fair. Celery was a scarce article this week, the usual supply not coming to hand.

INFORMATION FOR BUYERS.

Sandbach, Parker & Co., Demerara, British Guiana, was established as long ago as 1782, the name and style of the firm at that time being McInroy, Sandbach & Co. It was, however, not British Guiana in those days, the colonies of Demerara, Berbice, Essequebo, which now constitute British Guiana, not having been finally ceded to Great Britain by the Dutch until the early part of the nineteenth century. For the whole of this period Sandbach & Co. have been largely interested in the mercantile life of the Colony, especially the sugar industry, and have always been prominent in all movements tending towards the progress of British Guiana and the West Indies in general. The English house of Sandbach, Tinne & Co., is situated at 3 Cook street, Liverpool, and the partners of the firm have long been associated with the mercantile and charitable life of that city. Their name is known in mercantile circles throughout the world, and in shipping circles, their clipper-built sailing vessels, which were engaged in the passenger-carrying trade between England and Demerara, and in the carriage of coolie immigrants from Calcutta to the West Indies, before and after the advent of steam, will not yet have been forgotten. The present partners are John Ernest Tinne, Evelyn S. Parker, and John A. Tinne, and the resident representative in Demerara is C. G. A. Wyatt, who will be well known to numbers of Canaidans who have visited Demerara. The firm is keenly interested in fostering trade between England and the British West Indies and Canada, and appreciate very much the preference extended during recent years to their produce by the Canadian Government. They recognize, along with most thinking people in the West Indies, that the best interests of Great Britain's tropical possession in this part of the world will be best served by a closer commercial alliance with Canada. A lot is hoped for as the result of the report of the recent Royal Commission, and the action that is to be taken with regard to same is awaited with great interest and some anxiety. To take care of their growing business with the Dominion, Sandbach, Parker & Co., in 1909, opened a branch office in Montreal, under the name and style of the West India Company, Limited, and the management of this office will be always found ready and willing to give Canadians any information in their possession regarding business or other matters connected with Demerara and the West Indies.

Easter is only two weeks away. John Taylor & Co., Toronto, soap manufacturers are offering an appropriate novelty for this particular season. It is "Egg Soap" and in size and appearance is made to represent the common ordinary egg so much sought at this time of the year. Their advertisement in this issue gives particulars.

The Quaker Oats Company have devised a unique idea to push the sales of Quaker Oats for 30 days from March 15th to April 15th. Not only are they making a special reduction of 10 cents per case on both size packages of Quaker Oats but they are editing a paper which is being sent daily to over three hundred salesmen, which contains all the news of the campaign and editorials from each member of the staff on how to secure more business on Quaker Oats. It also gives a record each day of the most notable achievement accomplished by any salesmen the previous day. They are conducting a particularly widespread campaign on advertising; not only are all the leading magazines carrying their advertisements, but wall signs and bill boards are being put up at a rapid rate. The company is sending a post card to every retail grocer in both city and country and will send buttons, window streamers and display cards to any grocer who will use them. This is one of the largest campaigns this company has ever originated and bids fair to outrival any of its predecessors.

The Real Reason

Get right down to the real reason for every great success and it is quality in one form or another. Nowhere is this more often demonstrated than in the grocery store. RED ROSE TEA is a fine example. It came into the Ontario market about ten years ago when the field was overcrowded with different brands. To-day it is a leader with only enough opposition to make good healthy competition. The basis of this success has been the quality of the tea and the quality of the service both to merchants and consumers. The quality of RED ROSE TEA does not vary. You are always sure it is the same "Good Tea."

The grocers who are using Red Rose in their homes believe most strongly in its quality ; their confidence makes it easy to increase their sales. They know it pays to recommend

THE SONG OF THE WHOLESALE BUYER.

The agents and commission men
Come crowding in the door,
They sometimes hand you out a bunch
Of talk that makes you sore.
From sunrise until close of day
They come each mother's son,
Whene'er we want to punish them,
We introduce a pun.

The man who sells us teas comes in,
He is an awful teaze;
The coffee man is coughing, though
We never heard him sneeze;
The gent who pushes candied peel
Is candid I don't think;
"Old Pickled Goods" gets pickled
Though he never takes a drink.

The whiskey drummer comes along,
With whiskers on his chin;
Officious is the talk of him
Who sells fish by the tin;
A seedy individual
Sells bird and cotton seed;
The hops are purchased from a man
Who hops, he does indeed.

The currant salesman interrupts
The current of my thoughts;
The character who offers figs
His figures all are noughts;
The traveler who talks canned corn
Has corns upon his feet;
The beet man beats them all, for he
Is seldom off the beat.

The guy with orange marmalade,
An orangeman is he;
The salt man ain't a salt, because
He never sailed the sea;
The prices they are raisin'
On raisins every day;
The saucy chap that sells us sauce
Has saucer eyes, they say.

The savory is sold by one
Who savours of the barns;
The fellow with the spices has
A spicy lot of yarns;
The sage is handled by a sage
With thin and hoary locks;
A funny looking butter-in
Quotes butter packed in crocks.

The mustard man was in the war,
But mustered out was he;
The prune man was a gardener,
And learned to prune a tree;
The cereals are advertised
In serial magazines;
The agents in our sample room
Are crowded like sardines.

GOOD ENOUGH.

Rummaging about in the barn one afternoon a farmer and his son came upon a nest containing a dozen or more eggs. It was an old nest and so were the eggs.

That night the son was astonished to see the old man trudging down the road with the house egg basket on his arm.

"Where are you going father?" asked the boy.

"Oh! just over to Brown's store with these eggs," answered the elder.

"But you know those eggs are mighty old," persisted the other.

"Yes, I know," returned other, witheringly, "but I'm only going to trade them for a little tobacco; they're good enough for that."

The C. E. Plain Company, Limited, has been incorporated at Toronto to carry on the business of general commission merchants and cold storage warehousemen. The provisional directors of the company are Norval Robert Hodgson, Edwin Fay Holcomb, and William Young Denison. The head office will be located in Ottawa.

Messrs. H. Irvine & Son, of Drayton, Ont., will move soon into their newly erected store, which is said to be up-to-date from top to bottom and equipped with the latest improvements.

It is announced that a reward of $100 is being offered for information as to the whereabouts of Charles Abbot, a Toronto grocer, who disappeared from that city Feb. 28 last.

Eggs are Lower with Brisk Demand

Heavy Arrivals Cause Further Reductions in Egg Prices — Reasonable Prices Bring Large Demand — Butter Steady — Provision Situation a Little Easier—Trade Rather Quiet, But Good Spring Trade Expected—Cheese Firm.

The hog movement in the Western States at the first of the week was even larger than expected and provisions were consequently weaker. While last week the arrival of hogs on the Chicago market was slightly less than the previous week, they were in excess of a year ago. In Canadian markets, the situation is a little easier, while the English market is barely steady.

The supply of hogs in both Canada and the United States is greatly in excess of a year ago. In the latter country the hog supply is reported to be large and a steady battle is going on between American packers on one side and American hog producers on the other. The first named are endeavoring to break prices, but whenever they do this, producers hold back supplies and bring the market up again. A much lower range in prices of hogs for 1911, than prevailed in 1910, is looked for. In Canada, the price of live hogs is already about $3.00 lower than was quoted a year ago, when prices reached the high water mark.

Eggs, as predicted last week, have become easier throughout the country due to increased arrivals at most centres. The demand has been good, stimulated to a high level by reasonable prices, which has encouraged the housewife into their plentiful use. Some dealers are looking for still lower prices with the arrival of the warm weather and it is also pointed out that once the hens start laying in the spring they generally keep it up for some time.

Butter remains steady with quotations in most centres showing no change. An increase in arrivals is noted. The demand, as during the past three weeks, has been good.

Cheese is an article that seems to have been steadily shaping for higher prices, on most markets. While the demand is not extremely heavy at present, stocks are small, and prices will likely continue steady. New cheese will come on a market well stripped of stocks and opening prices will likely rule rather high.

The provision trade continues moderately active, the Lenten season and the presence of such lines as fish and eggs at reasonable prices, detracting somewhat from its usual line, but dealers are not discouraged and look for a brisk spring trade to open up soon.

MONTREAL.

Provisions.—The market has been rather quiet during the past week. Demand is lighter than it has been and the situation is generally easier. The market reports from United States centres show an increase in spot stocks and future prices are a little easier. Locally the supply of live hogs is temporarily short.

Butter.—The market is steady at the former figures. Prices are considered firm owing to the diminished stocks of butter that have been held in storage. There is already some new milk creamery butter on the market but receipts have been small. It is practically assured that there will be no held-over stocks by the time the new make is arriving in liberal quantities. Just now prices are firm.

The most of the stocks held now are for export and of colored cheese there is acarcely any left. It is colored that the local trade ask for. The total exports of cheese to date amount to about $20,000,000.

TORONTO.

Provisions.—Trade in provisions continues quiet, with prices showing little change. The Lenten season is probably having some effect in curtailing the use of pork products, while the plentiful supply of such commodities as eggs and fish at reasonable figures is also responsible for a share of the depression in business..

Live hogs are quoted at a reduction this week, in sympathy with the easier feeling that has been noticeable for some time back. As a rule, provision prices are moderately steady. Heavy mess pork and short cut are slightly easier, due to slack demand.

Butter.—Under the pressure of more liberal receipts than for some time back, the firmness in butter is not so noticeable this week, but prices remain steady at present quotations. There is a good demand, especially for the better grades. Dealers are not looking for any marked change in butter prices, but, of course, the market will be controlled by supply and demand.

Eggs.—The further reduction in egg prices which we forecasted in our last issue has materialized and quotations this week are 19 to 20 cents. Arrivals have been large, but demand has also kept up as the hens seem to have started in earnest, and dealers are looking for some further reduction in prices if present conditions continue.

Cheese.—The firmness in cheese, noted last week, has turned into an advance in price, as expected. Large new cheese have been raised to 13¾ cents and stocks are light, while twin cheese, which are in very limited supply, are quoted at 14 cents, with some firms asking as high as 14½. The new cheese will come on a pretty bare market, and opening prices are likely to rule quite high.

THE MANCHURIA WALNUT.

This Has Just Been Introduced on Eastern Canadian Market.

Toronto, March 23.—One of the new items on the local grocery market is the Manchuria walnut which was introduced a few days ago. This nut figured fairly prominently on the Winnipeg and Vancouver markets last Christmas, but has just made its way here.

The story of the discovery of the Manchuria walnut so far as this continent is concerned is an interesting one. Two years ago two young Californians were out in Manchuria and observed that. while the walnut grew quite extensively there, it was not exported. They sent a trial shipment to the United States and it took so well that they have gone into the business of exporting walnuts.

Last year they directed considerable attention to Western Canada, and the Christmas markets in Vancouver, Winnipeg and other cities were supplied with the Manchuria nut.

The eastern markets are now being given attention.

The Manchurian walnut has a little different flavor from the French nut, it being a little more bitter in taste—a characteristic which some people favor.

"INSPECTION AND SALE ACT."

Bill of Interest to Many Dealers Discussed in Senate.

Sir Richard Cartwright has introduced into the Senate, at Ottawa, a bill to amend the Inspection and Sale Act as regards the weights of a bushel and a bag of certain articles. The act has at moment of writing been received from the committee and will receive its third reading shortly.

The bill provides that "A bag of any article mentioned in this subsection shall mean, unless a bag by measure is specially agreed upon, that number of Dominion standard pounds of such article which is shown in this subsection opposite the name of such article.

Description of article.	Weight in Dominion standard pounds.
Artichokes	75
Beets	70
Carrots	70
Onions	75
Parsnips	60
Potatoes	80
Turnips	70

Also that "A barrel of potatoes shall mean, unless a barrel of specified size, kind or content by measure is specially agreed upon, one hunhred and sixty-five Dominion standard pounds of potatoes."

No Change in Flour and Cereal Prices

Flour Prices Unchanged Although Wheat Continues at Low Level—Reduction of 20 Cents a Barrel Reported From Markets East of Montreal—Trade in Flour Not Brisk—United States Markets Extremely Quiet.

Wheat prices continue a see-saw movement, fluctuating within a small margin at all markets, and Canadian prices show little change from a week ago. There is, however, a slightly firmer feeling in sympathy with the same feeling in European markets. American markets during the last few days of last week acted in direct contrast to the markets of the old world and on Saturday while cables on wheat futures at Liverpool closed a halfpenny lower, the markets of Chicago and Winnipeg were a half cent higher on May options.

While under the lower wheat prices of the past two months, United States flour has been reduced as much as 50 cents per barrel. Canadian prices remained at about the same level as when wheat prices were highest. While some dealers say that the reduction in wheat prices during the past two months, and the continued low level, should warrant an casiness in flour prices, still there may be no change, as any reduction in price would hardly cause any increase in trade, and would probably only mean that millers would have to deliver present contracts at the lower price.

Trade in flour is not brisk, and a large percentage of the flour moving is made up of the delivery of contracts. Export enquiries continue to come in slowly, and bids in some cases are considerably out of line with quotations here. The English flour market is reported quiet, and the same inactivity that has characterized United States markets for some time continues, with general complaints from all parts of the country of lack of shipping instructions at all points and absence of new business.

The visible wheat supply in Canada last week was 10,131,000 bushels, compared with 11,316,000 bushels the previous week and 8,020,000 bushels last year. The United States visible wheat supply on Mar. 20th was 36,562,000 bushels as compared with 26,788,000 bushels on Mar. 21, 1910, and 37,080,000 bushels on Mar. 22, 1909.

Cereal prices remain unchanged, with a normal trade passing in most centres. A slightly firmer feeling is noticeable in oats, but is not at present expected to affect rolled oats quotations.

TORONTO.

Flour.—There has been no change in the flour situation since last week and first patents, Manitoba, are still quoted at $5.40 per barrel, although a reduction of 20 cents per barrel is reported from the markets east of Montreal. Wheat continues at the same low level, 97½ cents per bushel, this being the average price for No. 1 Northern and while the continued low price seems to warrant easiness in flour, still there may be no change. Millers see no necessity of reducing prices, as this would mean the delivery of present contracts at the lower price also. Ontario wheat is dull at 80 cents per bushel, with flour prices unchanged.

CHILLIWACK CREAMERY.

Financial Statement of Edenbank, B.C., Establishment Shows Prosperity.

Vancouver, March 23.—The excellent demand for butter which obtains in the coast cities has apparently brought prosperity to the Edenbank creamery in the Chilliwack district. The annual meeting was held last week, and the returns to the patrons showed a marked increase over the previous years. The butterfat sold in 1910 was 207,652 pounds, bringing $66,804.17, averaging 32 cents a pound. This creamery company has established a branch office in Vancouver for the marketing of its product.

Remember that price cards are a valuable addition to a window display.

Berlin Merchant Was Brake on Council

Councillor Dunke, Who is a Grocer, Combats Garbage By-Law and Saves Expense to Berlin Merchants — The Early Closing Observance—Difficulties of R. M. A. in Sécuring New Members—Fine New Grocery.

Staff Correspondence.

Berlin, March 23.—C. B. Dunke, of the grocery firm of Dunke & Co., is a member of the Town Council, and that fact was of considerable benefit to the retailers recently when an attempt was made in the council to railroad through a measure affecting garbage collection, that would have saddled a proportion alleged to be unfair, of the total cost on the King street merchants. This will serve as an illustration of the advisability of retailers being always vigilant in seeing that they have proper representation on municipal councils.

Berlin has a by-law against keeping a store open later than 10 o'clock Saturday nights and 7 o'clock on other nights. Generally speaking the law is pretty faithfully observed but it was found necessary at a recent meeting of the Retail Merchants' Association to draw the attention of the police authorities to the fact that several grocers have been persistently ignoring the by-law, keeping open every night and until nearly midnight on Saturdays.

The Retail Merchants' Association finds it difficult to make much headway in getting the Berlin grocers into the association, by reason of the vexed question of price-cutting. Several of the down-town firms make a specialty of Thursday bargains and use up large spaces in the newspapers in advertising their "Thursday Specials;" one firm frequently using four and five newspaper columns. The firms that do not advertise and even some of those that do, are bitter against the system of price-cutting and some make it a pretext for antagonism to the Retail Merchants' Association, forgetting that price regulation is rather beyond the province of an association of retailers, for obvious reasons. Officers of the association are endeavoring to convince merchants that there is far more chance of rectifying existing conditions, admitted to be evil, from within the association than by staying out of it.

Stuebing & Son, grocers, Queen street south, have doubled the size of their grocery by taking over the store next door to the one they have occupied during the past three years. By taking down the partition between the two stores and extending modern store fixtures over the entire store they have succeeded in fitting up premises that will compare favorably with any outside the large cities.

Trade Notes.

A despatch from London, Ontario, says that new maple syrup has arrived on that market, and that, in consequence, there is little or no call for the old canned product. London grocers sell but little of the local brewing, chiefly because the farmers are able to dispose of it without difficulty on the local market at $1.25 the gallon and 35 cents per quart. Around London the indications would seem to point to a short sugar and syrup season.

With a share capital of $5,000, the Trent Valley Cheese and Butter Company, Limited, has been incorporated at Toronto. This company, as the name implies, proposes to make and sell butter and all kindred dairy products. The head office will be at Campbellford, Ontario, and the provisional directors, Walter Charles Todd, John Oliver, Josiah Tinney, Charles Nelson and Luther Andrew Denike.

The Bell Fruit Farms, Limited, has been incorporated at Toronto, with a share capital of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars. The firm will carry on the business of horticulturists, agriculturists, canners and preservers. The head office will be Grimsby and the provisional directors: Thomas George Davis Bell, Sara Augusta Bell, and Frederick Charlton Irvine.

The grocery store run by William Boulter at O'Leary, a little village in Prince Edward Island, was destroyed by fire. The loss is estimated at $1,000.

BILL TO COMPEL DATING OF CANNED GOODS

Provisions of Legislation Introduced Into New York House of Representatives at Albany—Opinion of Prominent Canadian Canner as to What Would Follow in Wake of Passage of Such Law in the Dominion.

A bill has been introduced to the Legislature of the State of New York, at Albany, which, if passed, will compel the manufacturers of canned goods in the U.S. to label upon the can the date when the contents were packed. The document also provides for a fine of not less than $500, and not more than $1,000 where the data is omitted or where the information was fraudulent.

Interviewed by The Canadian Grocer as to the results which would accrue were such legislation passed in Canada, a prominent canner expressed the opinion that such legislation was unnecessary here as conditions were uniformly good.

"In my opinion," said he, "such legislation would be a scource of great trouble and loss, to all interested in the manufacture and sale of canned goods, while no benefit would be derived. Canned goods that are properly put up, will keep indefinitely, and indeed many lines improve in quality with age. Large quantities have been carried in stock for more than a year. It would, I think, be a great hardship to all the fruit and vegetable growers if such an act were passed because it would prevent the canners, when there were super-abundant crops, from taking care of the surplus. It has been frequently demonstrated that if the canners were not in a position to take care of all fruits and vegetables grown each season this surplus would go to waste.

"There are many other good reasons why such an act should not be enforced here," he continued. "I am really at a loss to know any benefit direct or indirect that would be derived if it were effected. It would mean serious loss and inconvenience to the growers, manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers. If canned goods would not keep indefinitely there might be something in favor of the proposition."

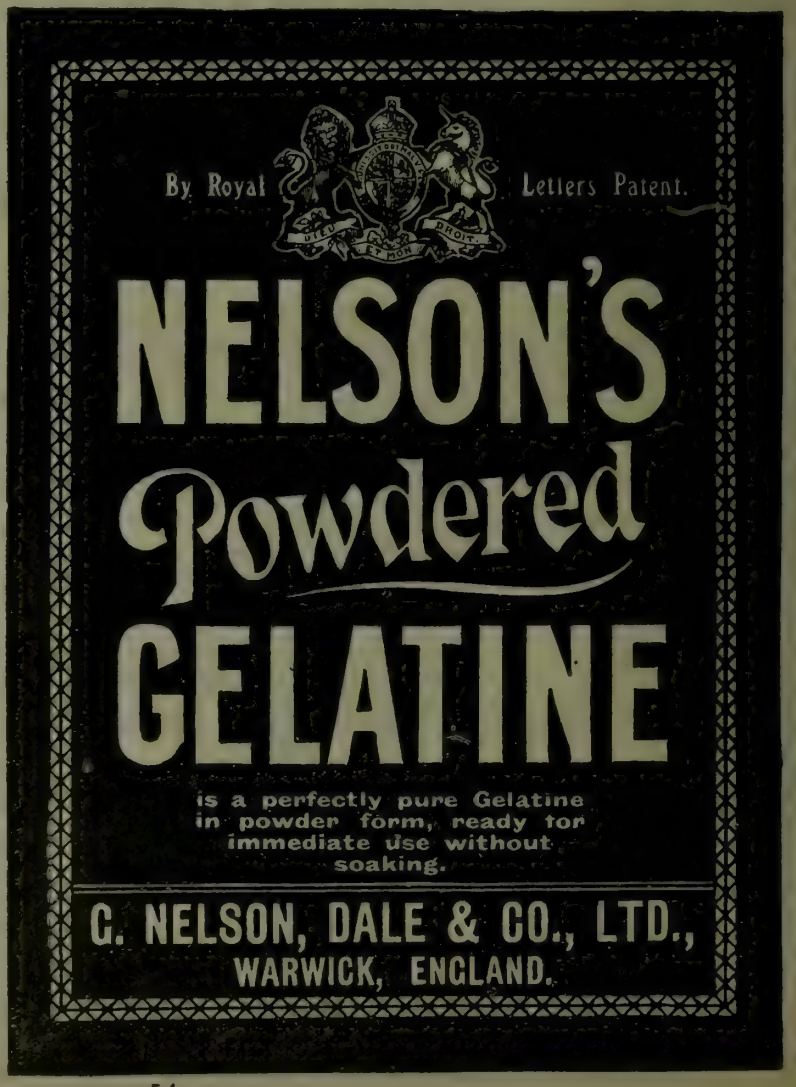
ITEMS FOR BUSY DEALERS.

Events and Sayings That Have Attracted Some Attention.

According to Charles M. Pepper, of the Bureau of Trade Relations of the United States, that country is by far the leading source of Canada's egg importations, and Canada is only a small exporter. Mr. Pepper says the quantity Canada had for export has decreased from about 3,000,000 dozens in 1906 to 82,000 dozen in 1911. Imports by Canada from the Republic to the south average, Mr. Pepper insists, about 1,000,000 dozen a year, while Canada is able to spare to the United States an average of only 35,000 dozen a year. Last year Canada took from the U. S. A. 750,000 dozen, and exported to her 40,000 dozen.

In connection with the case of the city of Montreal against certain storage people who were holding against the wishes of that municipality Chinese eggs that had been condemned as impure by the city's health officers, The Montreal "Gazettee" says: "Mr. Nasmith, a baker of Toronto, went upon the witness stand and testified that he had used these Han Kow eggs in preference to fresh eggs in the shell in his establishment in Toronto, and was thoroughly satisfied with the result."

Mr. Justice Weir, who was presiding on the case, decided that the evidence of the Toronto man could not be admitted, because the eggs he had used were taken from the shipment before it was seized at Montreal.



James Brown, of Montreal, a retired grocer, wandered from home clad in little more than his nightclothing, and perished from exposure. The body was found near Crystal Park, a mile from his house the following morning.

It is reported from Galt that a movement is on foot in that town to re-organize and re-vivify the branch of the Retail Merchants' Association in that town.

Woodstock is accredited with having closed an arrangement whereby Libby, McNeil & Libby, a pickling firm of Chicago, will construct there a branch factory. It is said that the farmers of Oxford round about have contracted to grow some 200 acres of cucumbers to supply the establishment.

It is reported from Trenton, Ont., that an English syndicate, heavily capitalized, has representatives in Prince Edward County bargaining with farmers for the control of orchards. The scheme, it is said, is to be operated on a ten-year lease basis. Some of the progressive orchardists, it is understood, consider the move a good one.

W. R. Orr, of Detroit, Mich., president of the Detroit Ad. Club and of the affiliated ad. clubs of Buffalo, Rochester and Cleveland, speaking to the Toronto Ad. Club at its birthday dinner, said that Canadians comprise a big proportion of the men occupying prominent positions and ranking high in the professions of the United States. There are, he said, 100,000 Canadians in Detroit. The speaker also pointed out that a widespread demand for greater cleanliness in advertising had arisen. This, he said, formed part of a movement for the betterment of moral, political and business life. Clean advertising meant honesty and square dealing with the public and the elimination of fakes and dishonest schemes.

CHRISTIE'S

Because they are the Best.

The Superiority of Christie Biscuits is unquestioned. Since particular women from Coast to Coast call Christie Biscuits "The Best Baked" and "The Purest of all Pure Foods," the reasons for the wise Grocer's preference are self-evident.

There's just one surety of biscuit purity—right inspection of every ingredient entering into the "bakes," combined with cleanly, scientific baking under modern and sanitary conditions.

CHRISTIE BISCUITS are the best and purest because we take every precaution that makes for biscuit perfection. For fifty years we have endeavored to bake the best biscuits—we have been insistent on high-grade quality—we have constantly improved our facilities until to-day our big factory is known as the cleanest and most modern in all Canada.

All our energies have been concentrated in the making of better biscuits. The name "CHRISTIE" is not only a surety of biscuit purity, but also a household word all over the Dominion.

Celery and Tomatoes in Good Supply

Big Arrival of Florida Stocks—Demand is Good—Tomatoes are Reasonable in Price With a Brisk Trade—Banana Trade is Expected to Show New Life in the Near Future—Lemons are Firmer.

Milder weather has had some effect in stimulating trade in fruits and vegetables, but if it would continue without a break, it would be much better for the business. With the alternate cold and mild weather, retailers are not inclined to order any large quantities. The banana trade has not taken on much new life, but is expected to do so in the near future, as danger of the fruit being damaged by frost becomes less.

Florida tomatoes and celery are arriving freely and are enjoying a good demand, tomatoes especially, being most reasonable in price. It is reported that the Florida celery crop will be much shorter than last year, and as shipments of the California article have ceased, it looks as if the market for Florida would rule firmer as the season advances.

The outlook for Florida tomatoes at the first of the season was for the heaviest crop in the history of the state, but climatic setbacks followed, winding up with a dry, hot spell that greatly reduced previous estimates, and while the acreage in Florida in tomatoes is larger this season than last, it is thought that the total crop will be lighter than last season's.

While potatoes in Montreal were slightly higher this week, owing to a temporary shortage of supplies, in Toronto there was a slightly easier feeling. Stocks on the whole are reported to be none too large.

Lemons are firmer, owing to smaller supplies due to the effects of frost on the crops in Italy.

MONTREAL.

Green Fruits.—A slightly better feel- is evident in green fruits. Strawberries are in better demand. Apples are scarce and dear. Lemons and oranges are moving steadily. There is no particular feature in this market at present.

TORONTO.

Green Fruits.—Imported tomatoes are enjoying an excellent trade as the price is reasonable for this time of the year, being quoted at $3 per case of 6 baskets. Arrivals on this market are large, the stock running mostly into fancy—that is large sized—tomatoes. The firmness in oranges noted in last week's issue has turned into an advance in the price of navels of 25 cents, bringing quotations up to $3 to $3.25. Stocks in this market are not heavy as the rains have caused a decrease in the shipment of California oranges. A few valencias are coming in and are quoted at $4 to $4.50 per case. Apples are selling fairly well and prices are firming up. Lemons are firmer.

Vegetables,—Prices in vegetables show little change this week. Boston head lettuce are higher and are quoted at $3 to $3.50 per hamper. Prices of potatoes are a little easier this week, but most dealers do not look for any reduction in price, holding quotations for Ontario stock at $1 per bag, although some sales were reported at a slightly lower figure. Florida celery has been coming in freely with a normal demand at $2.50 to $3 per case. Yellow onions are steady and most dealers are asking $2 per bag. Spanish onions continue at $3 per case, but trade at present is not large.

POINTERS FOR THE DEALER.

Be the first to show new things. It impresses customers with the fact that you are up to date.

Get several people to point out what they believe to be the defects in your window display. Their criticisms will be of value to you.

Guard against crowding, in your display. Do not try to show your whole stock at one time. A simple display leaves a better impression.

Do not overlook the final touches, such as covering bare spots, and cleaning the outside of the window.

The first important feature to be looked after, before anything else is done, is to have the glass perfectly clean, as this has a great bearing on the finished window.

Price cards should be freely used as they assist in the main object of display —the selling of goods.

Richardson Brothers, Harriston, have sold their grocery business to Prichard & Walkey, who take possession on or before the first of May.

KIND WORDS FROM MONTREAL.

Montreal, Que., March 22, 1911

The Canadian Grocer:

Twenty-two years ago I started in the grocery business, not having any previous experience. Some of my knowledge has been gathered at random, but most of it I have secured by reading The Canadian Grocer. I have found it profitable because of the expert market reports.

The recent intimation of an advance in sugar paid me well, and on canned goods alone my profits this year will be sufficient to cover 25 per cent. of my total operating expenses. The pointers on store equipment have also been very useful, and I have carried out many of the ideas in my new store.

In my opinion any grocer who is not a subscriber to your paper is doing himself an injustice.

Fish - Oysters

Bulk of Trade is in Fresh Frozen Fish

Demand Continues at Appreciable Figure—Trade Has Lost Some of Its Enthusiasm—Supplies of Salt and Pickled Fish are Limited—Lobsters Continue High in Price—Past Oyster Season Has Been Satisfactory.

The markets have lost some of their interest with the passing of the first half of Lent and the approaching finer weather. There is a good trade still passing, but it does not reach the proportions characteristic of business two or three weeks back. The demand continues to reach an appreciable figure but the trade seem to have lost some of its enthusiasm. The situation in regard to supply is practically the same as that which has prevailed for some time. Supplies of salt and pickled fish are, as formerly, reported very limited. Fresh frozen fish are enjoying a good share of the trade. The prices of lobsters continue at a high level, shortage of stocks being due to bad weather and ice inshore on the coast. Nova Scotia reports fresh cod and haddock in fairly good supply, but below the average of other seasons.

The oyster trade is at a low ebb at most centres with a brief revival whenever cold weather is experienced. Stocks however up to the present, have been arriving on the Canadian markets in excellent condition. From most centres come reports of a year's trade in oysters, comparing favorably with other years.

QUEBEC.

Montreal.—With the coming of milder weather and the passing of Lent, the interest of the fish market is departing. Dealers are still active, but the situation is practically the same as last week, with little change in prices.

Some report no offerings of Labrador herrings, green cod, haddock, pollock, hake, sea or lake trout, showing to what limits offerings are confined. Fresh frozen fish is in good supply and is receiving the bulk of the demand. But Lent is not over for a few weeks and business should be felt at practically the former figures.

ONTARIO.

Toronto.—Fish prices continue about the same as last week. The milder weather has been accompanied by slackness; but as one dealer pointed out, trade is regulated a certain extent by the people's appetite and of course after the large consumption of fish that has taken place this season, a dropping off in the demand at times is not a surprise. Then, too, as the weather becomes milder, dealers do not care about handling too large quantities. The oyster trade is also regulated somewhat by the weather, but the quality so far has kept up well. It is noticeable that a few days' continued cold weather brings a big revival in the oyster trade with another slack spell as soon as the weather moderates. Fresh halibut is quoted on this market this week at 10 cents.

NOVA SCOTIA.

Halifax.—Haligonians enjoyed some fresh Atlantic halibut last week when an American fishing vessel was forced into this port in a damaged condition and disposed of 8,000 pounds of halibut on this market.

The price of lobsters continues to soar. This week a few hundred small lobsters were landed here on one day and they were quickly bought up. Since then the market has been bare. Bad weather and ice inshore are the causes of the shortage. Fresh cod and haddock are in fairly good supply, but somewhat below the average for the season. There are only a few small salt mackerel on the market, but pickled herring are in good supply, the quality of the stock being good. This is the season when the demand for herring is heaviest and all the jobbers report heavy sales. Salt cod is also selling freely. Most of the finnan haddies on the market are storage stock, the dealers having been unable to get a sufficient quantity of fresh fish ahead to cure any new stock.

There is a good demand from upper Canadian points for all smoked fish. Stocks of smoked salmon are light, and it is retailing at 30 cents per pound. The shipments of fish to foreign ports are very light, in fact there are no large quantities in the stores for export. The Lunenburg bankers are now preparing for the spring trip.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

St. John.—There was little change in the fish market this week. Prices were about the same and the varieties offered similar to those last reported.

HYDRO CONTRACT DATES.

Hon. Adam Beck Introduces Bill to Provincial Legislature.

Hon. Adam Beck has introduced into the Provincial Legislature at Toronto a bill purporting to specify the dates from which the contracts made by several municipalities with the Hydro-Electric Commission shall be binding.

The towns of Brampton, Dundas, Seaforth and Mitchell, and the village of Weston are concerned. By this proposed legislation the contract with Brampton will be binding from June 14th, 1910, with Dundas from November 7th, 1910, with Seaforth, December 19, 1910, and with Mitchell from Christmas Day of the same year. The contract made between the commission and the village of Weston, will, under the bill, be made to take effect from June 17, 1910.

W. H. Everitt has opened a grocery and supply store in Walkerville, Ont.

Samuel G. Lamport, who for a number of years conducted a general store in Clandeboye, Ont., has sold the business to McKenzie Bros., of Lobo. Mr. Lamport has been in poor health for some time, and will move to Exeter to reside.

Some time ago the grocery store of Charles McCausland, Paris, was burglarized, and over $30 worth of tobacco stolen. Chief Felker, is said to have recovered the goods under a bed in a house about three miles west of Burford.

Place of Change Making in Retailing

Resentment Aroused in Mind of Customer by Dealer Who Persists in Demanding Bill of Smaller Denomination — How it Worked Out in Toronto—Lesson Taught by Mail Order Houses.

By James D. Smith.

"Is that the smallest you've got?"

How that question grates on a customer going into a shop to make a purchase and tendering, say, a five dollar bill in payment.

I knew a man in Toronto, who habitually made that inquiry, in an insinuating way, and I have heard old customers of his speak disparagingly of him often and often. That was the recollection of him that remained with them, and you may well believe it was recalled always with a certain underlying feeling of scorn of his business ability.

The man I have in mind was proprietor of a good business, and had two stores. But I know for a fact that a good part of the popularity in which those stores were held, was due to the obliging clerks he always gathered around him. It was they who kept his sales up, and kept customers too, when some unconscious slip on the part of the proprietor had strained relations to the breaking point. Generally it was some such question as that quoted at the beginning of this article that caused the trouble. It seemed impossible for that man to abstain from venting inane remarks every time some one he knew came into his store.

Just Human Nature.

It is a trait of human nature, as firmset as sin, that people remember longest the remarks that seem to the speaker often irrelevant and of no significance whatever. And so it is idle for a dealer to think customers forget readily the little jibes he makes. They don't. More than that when his store happens to enter in any conversation in which she is interested, the allusions to him that are bound to come are sure to be most unflattering.

Why should a customer be made to feel she is doing something wrong when giving a bill of reasonably large denomination in payment for goods just purchased? She is not doing anything she should not do. Why should she be made to feel as though she had no business submitting such an amount of money unless she took out its value in goods. The dealer buys a stock to sell it, and the wise dealer will make it as easy as possible for anyone who wants to leave cash with him, no matter what the amount.

Give Most, Get Most.

Generally speaking I've always found that the man who made most out of his business gave most to his customers. He was never loath to go to any amount of bother to himself to take all worry from the patrons of his store. Most certainly he never inquired: 'Is that the smallest you have?' Not him! He would have tried every store within the block to change the bill given if he could not do it himself.

The correct change customer has gone to the land where stores are not known. If a dealer wants business now-a-days he must have lots of change in his till. Why should it be otherwise? Consider the mail order houses. When any one tenders a bill in payment there it is not returned with the "smaller," request. Not much! It goes down to the cash department where probably hundreds of its like had preceded it that day.

An Element in Trading.

The city customer knows that. She goes into any other store with like faith and when the dealer repudiates his responsibilities she doesn't feel any keen impulse to go to his store again. Change-making is as important an element in trading as service; it is in fact, bound up in service, and the sooner every retailer appreciates it the better for the dealers.

It is only fair to say that the better class of dealers are alive to the situation and that the evil is not so extensive as it was. Still there are a great number of men who persist in running their business on the lines of twenty years ago. The man who persists in evading his just responsibities is bound to get himself disliked, and dislike is almost always fatal in trade. Let the dealer be wise, and, even if the customer hands a fifty-dollar bill over the counter as payment for $3.15 worth of goods, do not let her hear that exasperating question: "Is that the smallest you have?"

Busy Housewives Will be Thinking of Papering Soon

With the approach of spring, the seasom when the housewife takes much to heart the beautification of her home, those merchants who handle wall paper should direct their attention to the line and begin to prepare their plans. One of the important features is careful selection of stock. Only those patterns should be stocked that appeal to the fancy of this customer. This fancy varies greatly with different people and in different communities and the merchant will have to use his own judgment in buying. He should not stick to patterns that have been shown before, and he MUST have something new to create interest.

The merchant should not take this to mean, however, that he is to select a pattern because of its oddness, for, while something of this nature may interest a prospective buyer, she might not want to have it for a decoration in her home. Many merchants show lack of taste in selecting patterns that appeal, and for that reason it is well for many that they should secure the aid of some competent persons when deciding on the stock.

Another consideration in the putting in of stocks is the price. The dealer must have goods that will suit the pocket as well as the fancy. This can be quite accurately ascertained by the class of other goods which the customer usually buys. And it is well to commence the display of your wall paper early in the season, as the housewife is generally planning far ahead what she is going to do in the spring. A pattern that catches her fancy will be remembered when the time to purchase comes. The large stores in the city are already giving window space to the showing of wall paper, and the smaller stores might do well in following their lead. Several window displays should be made during the season and a few patterns continually shown in a prominent part of the store so as to catch the customer's eye. These displays should be changed often, that different pattern may be presented. Clerks should not wait for the customer to enquire about them but should introduce the subject whenever possible, for, although a sale may not be made at the time, it will perhaps pave the way for one at a later date.

TO HELP THE DEALER.

Defeat in the grocery business oftener comes from lethargy than from any other cause. Lethargy comes generally from lack of ideas; lack of ideas either from lack of travel or lack of communicated news of what other men in the business are doing.

You will notice that THE KEYNOTE OF THE WHOLE IS LACK. The man who lacks, wants something. That is why this is being written.

The Grocer takes the position that one dealer can help another; it also insists that one retailer should help the others if he can do so without injury to his own business. There are many little "tricks" of trade, new innovations, new ideas, which have contributed in large measure to the success of the merchant of eastern Canada, which would be joyfully welcomed by the beginners in the west and vice versa. A dealer knows perfectly how much he can help without sacrificing any assets of his own store. Maybe some one is overcoming in some unimagined way the difficulty that has been bothering you for a long time; maybe you are doing something that he is wrestling with. It would not hurt business to tell about them.

The Grocer wants to start a column on HOW TO BETTER YOUR BUSINESS. You are invited to send in an article telling how you have bettered yours. You can write over your own signature or any other, so long as you send you real name for reference. You can be "Old Grocer," "Old Salesman," anything you like. But WRITE. Just as soon as we get in a sufficient number of articles we will start this column. It's sure to help, and it's up to YOU.

Grocer's Encyclopedia—The Currant

Interesting Figures Dealing With Food Values of Grecian Currant—Comparison with Lean Beef—Where Little Fruit is Grown—Manner of Curing—The Scourge — Law Against Adulteration.

Did you ever stop long enough in handling it to consider at all the little dark wizened up currant? ever wait to wonder of what particular use it is in the world?

A writer recently credits the dried currant with containing no less than 73 per cent. of sugar in its most valuable form. He called it the "invert sugar" a composite of dextrose and levielose. It assists digestion, allays nervous excitement, and builds against nervous exhaustion.

No fruit can show this large proportion except those of and kindred with, the currant. Surely these are facts which the grocer who wishes to extend sales of this line of dried fruit, should not fail to bring before his customers.

In the dietary of the peasant classes of Greece—a people remarkable for their hardihood and health,—the currant appears at almost every meal, while in Germany and Holland, currant bread is a common article of food.

Currants and Beef.

A writer makes a comparison between currants and lean beef. Currants show 73 per cent. of grape sugar, the whole of which contributes to manufacture energy: beef contains no sugar at all. Currants contain 1.77 per cent. of proteid: the beef 19.3 per cent. Thus the important fact is thrust home that about 55 per cent. more nutriment is contained in currants than in beef.

It will be seen then that the people have at their command an article of food which is not expensive and of which they would surely and readily avail themselves did they know its value. The grocer has an excellent chance to turn this information to good use.

The currant is the dried berry of a small black delicate species of seedless grape, and the vine so exactly resmbles that of the grape that only an expert can tell the differenece. It flourishes only in certain parts of Greece and the adjacent islands and all attempts to transplant them to other lands have failed.

The city of Patras is the centre of the world's currant fields and nearly all exports are made from this port. The Vostizza currant, one of the best grades received in this country, is grown on a narrow strip of land on the northern side of the Gulf of Corinth. The currant vine, being very delicate requires great care in grafting, pruning, trimming and watering, and does not bear until it is six or seven years old. The gathering of the fruit commences about the end of July, the ripe bunches being cut off and placed in baskets in which they are carried to the drying grounds. The drying is effected simply by evaporation from the action of the sun, being exposed for 10 to 12 days. It is during this time that the currant grower dreads rainy weather as in that event the process of evaporation is retarded and this delay causes great inconvenience and often damage.

The fruit is sometimes attacked by a scourge known as "Peronopis" which usually affects the leaves but sometimes the fruit as welll. In 1900, because of this, the crop was reduced from 180,000 to 46,000 and that year the price of currants reached a very high figure. Again in 1906, the crop was reduced 25 per cent.

For some time, it was necessary to wash and clean the currant before retailing, but it is now fairly free from earth and other impurities, and can be sold without this trouble and loss.

With a view to prevent currants being gathered and shipped before ripe, the Grecians passed a bill in 1892 prohibiting any exportation of the fruit before Aug. 28th, and also enacting that anyone found guilty of adulterating currants in any form, or mixing old ones with new, should be liable to fine and imprisonment.

A. S. Harrison, of Lindsay, Ont., who has been in the grocery business there for a year or two, and who recently suffered considerable loss through fire, has decided to sell out.

W. E. Baker, a Lindsay, Ont., grocer, has leased the premises formerly occupied by a moving picture theatre and has turned the same into a large store.

A pleasant evening was spent on March 6th by the employes of Sloan's grocery store, Galt. In a large sleigh, sixteen strong, they drove to the home of L. C. Howell, near St. George, and were entertained with games, dancing and other amusements.

The Retail Dealer has Long Since Recognized that One of the Prime Requisites in Good Salesmanship is to KNOW the Goods He Sells.

There is no secret about this. "He profits most who serves others best," and in order to serve his customers adequately, the dealer must KNOW as much about a manufacturer's goods as there is to know.

There is no better medium in Canada to tell the dealer about goods he stocks than the advertising columns of The Canadian Grocer. He reads these columns because they are directly connected with his business, and he reads them at a time set apart for that purpose—it is a purely business proposition with him.

RIGHT IN YOUR LINE!

Don't let the druggist corner the big business offering in

Robinson's Patent Barley

It is a food and right in your line, and it is an article that is in daily use in thousands of Canadian homes. It is equally efficient as a food for infants and invalids and a generous display will invariably result in a quick sale.

Remember the name when next ordering—Robinson's

Syrup That Satisfies!

There's a steady demand in every locality for a good syrup—a demand which you can fill, and fill with profit to yourself by featuring

"CROWN BRAND" CORN SYRUP

This is a delicious syrup for table use, and is made from the finest selected white corn.

A little persuasion will induce your customers to buy a trial tin, and you may look forward with the utmost confidence to a regular succession of "repeats."

The Best Proposition!

Looked at any way you please, no line of goods holds out the same inducements to the Grocer as

UPTON'S
Jams, Jellies and Marmalade

First, they are made from the finest fruits in the world---Canadian Fruits---selected by experts and preserved and bottled in an up-to-date, sanitary factory, which is a model of cleanliness. Second, the "Upton" line never 'sticks,' because our extensive consumer advertising has created a demand for these goods; and third, selling "Upton's" specialties invariably leaves a satisfaction and profit-margin behind that makes trading a pleasure.

Are you featuring "Upton's"? If not, fall in line with the 'wise' ones.

THE SILENT SALESMAN

Goods whose trade-marked names have grown familiar to the public need no word-of-mouth explanations on quality or price from yourself or your clerks, for they are their own Silent Salesmen. They make a powerful appeal for trade by the known virtues which they hold within themselves.

All you have to do is to display them—think of the saving of energy you make when you stock with goods of spotless reputation! Two "Silent Salesmen" are printed below.

The "Thistle" Brand Haddies and Herring

The name and the fame of the "Thistle" brand of fish has brought credit and honor to the producers and why not money to you, friend? The Haddies never masquerade under the guise of inferior fish—the Herring and tomato sauce are ever true to their name.

Slime, dirt and uncleanliness have no part in the preparation—the work is done where the fish are caught. They are "Silent Salesmen" because

They Sell Themselves

Griffin & Skelley's Canned Asparagus

No greater harm could come to the packers, growers and shippers of the "Griffin" brand of canned asparagus than that someone sometime should somehow or some other discover a can that was less good than the delicate young stalks just as they are cut from the private garden of a connoisseur.

See how sure both you and your customers are that the quality will be maintained, year after year.

Lock the Door Before the Thief Gets In!!

THE KEITH SYSTEM

Has Been Tried by Actual Store Fires!!!

Cut of 100 book size, showing hood locked to cabinet.

We don't guess about this system being fire-proof, but we know. We have several affidavits on file from merchants who had fires destroying buildings and stocks of goods, and whose accounts were all saved through the KEITH SYSTEM.

In case of fire wouldn't it be a satisfaction if you had a KEITH SYSTEM and knew your records would be saved ?

The Time to Lock the Door is Before the Thief Breaks In.

When you buy a KEITH you not only lock the door and bar it against fire, but also against the bugbear of posting accounts on the one hand, and of mixing accounts, bringing forward wrong past accounts, losing slips, and the manipulation of charges on the other hand.

It is the right system for you at the right price.

Let us send you full information at once without putting you under any obligations to buy.

PINEAPPLE PIE.

Empty a can of Simcoe Grated Pineapple into dish. Beat the yolks of two eggs, add to them a teaspoonful of butter rubbed smooth with a cup of sugar, stir in a cup of milk and beat in the grated pineapple. Pour immediately into an open crust and bake in a moderate oven. When done, spread with meringue made by beating the white of an egg stiff with a tablespoonful of powdered sugar. Return to the oven long enough to brown lightly.

PINEAPPLE AND PEACH GLACES.

Drain the liquor from a can of Simcoe Peaches. Chop fine and empty into a dish with a can of Simcoe Shredded Pineapple. Cover with a cup of granulated sugar. Stand for an hour, and pour over them the liquor drained from the fruits and enough water to make a full pint-and-a-half of liquid. If not sweet enough, add sugar. Stir in the juice of a lemon, and the unbeaten white of an egg, and freeze.

Merchant—Clerk—Customer ALL Need the PROTECTION Which Only a RECEIPT Affords

This Register tells you: 1—Total cash sales made by each clerk; 2—Total of your credit sales; 3—Total amount of money received on account, and 4--Total amount of money paid out. Has separate cash drawer for each clerk. Also secret adding counter tells you total amount of all cash taken in. Built to stand on floor or counter.

Issuing a receipt with every purchase protects the merchant against carelessness, mistakes and dishonesty—against disputes with customers about purchases paid for, amounts paid on account, etc.

Putting a receipt in every parcel protects clerks against suspicion, against the mistakes or carelessnesss of other clerks, and against misunderstandings with customers.

Protects customers, too. That's why

Successful Merchants Put a Receipt in Every Parcel.

Why don't YOU?

How can you hope to make a success of your business by following the methods of unsuccessful merchants? The difference between success and failure is simply a difference in methods.

Are you being influenced by the wrong kind of business men?

Why Aren't You Influenced By Successful Men?

Get Back Your Tea Trade

No reason why you should knock under to any tea peddler. "Maybell" Ceylon Tea, in 5 and 10 lb. decorated chests, will enable you to wipe out the competition of the most active peddler alive, That's because with "Maybell" Tea you can offer your customers a better tea proposition than the peddler can.

"Maybell" Ceylon Tea

is as good in quality as tea can be—and that's mighty good. And you can sell "Maybell" at a moderate price and still make a better profit than you can with any other line of tea on the market. The "Maybell" Decorated 5 and 10 lb. chests are just the convenient quantities that so many housekeepers prefer, packed in a manner that assures the preservation of full strength and flavor.

THE simplest and most efficient gasoline lamp in the world. Constructed upon new and scientific principles. A lamp that we guarantee and that guarantees itself through its very simplicity, ease of operation and utility. Absolutely nothing that can wear out or get out of order that cannot be removed and replaced without the use of tools, other than nature has given, in five seconds. There is only one wearing part—the generator. A simple twist of the wrist removes and replaces it with a new one. Two generators with each lamp. It is lighted from the floor in less than 10 seconds.

DO YOU KNOW

the facts about the lines of maple syrup and maple sugar which we offer you?

Perhaps you do. Maybe you do not.

Let us tell you.

To start with, we require from each and every producer from whom we purchase, a signed statement to the effect that every gallon maple syrup we buy from him is absolutely pure; that it is made from the sap of the maple tree only.

We operate in Quebec Province, the largest producing district in the world. We are right in the heart of the maple forests. This is a significant fact. Adulteration is unnecessary. We can secure the pure article right at our doors. We have no temptation.

Besides, you have our absolute guarantee that the goods offered you are not adulterated in any respect. They are pure after Government analysis.

Therefore, you are assured of quality.

Our lines are labelled most attractively, put up in glass or tin, as illustrated.

They sell on sight because they are of better appearance than any other line on the market.

Write us if you are not handling our lines.

DRIED FRUITS

This is the season of the year when all kinds of Dried Fruits are in demand, and this is more pronounced than ever this year on account of the extremely short crop of apples last Fall. Green apples are now nearly all used up, and what are left are held at fancy prices. Another thing, an unusual condition prevailed last year in that crops of nearly all fruits in all countries were very short, and in consequence of all these conditions stocks are getting very shy, and the time of heavy demand is only commencing. Some of the lines we quote are yet quite low in price, and it might be well to hook on to some of them before the scarcity of most kinds haul the balance up to a higher level.

Maple Syrup---The Genuine and False

Dealer Who Was Not Posted Sells Cheap Syrup Because He Could Not Explain Why Real Product Was More Expensive—The Selling Power of Quality —Why Syrup is Becoming Lighter in Color—Eastern House Makes Large Purchase in Eastern Townships—The Merchants' Problem.

Staff Correspondence.

Montreal, Mar. 30.—In a Winnipeg store recently a woman was purchasing maple syrup. At least she thought she was. The grocer placed on the counter before her two bottles, which to all external appearances contained the maple product she had asked for. The grocer had stated that there was a difference in price, which naturally prompted her to ask the difference between the two varieties. The grocer blankly admitted that he did not know and his customer bought the cheaper article.

This incident was witnessed by a friend of a local firm who handle and bottle the maple syrup which was refused by the customer on account of its price. The article that was sold is claimed to be "maple" in name only. The other carries a guarantee as to its purity, but the grocer was not sufficiently acquainted with his own stock to explain how the difference in price was accounted for. In all probability that woman was lost as a future purchaser of maple syrup. Her order could scarcely be expected to repeat for the reason that the stuff she had taken home was maple syrup only in as much as the label on the bottle included the word. To the mixture itself there may have been a ghost of the genuine maple flavor.

The Power of Quality.

And now in passing it may be of interest to point out that a certain grocery store in Toronto is selling this season's maple syrup at $1 a quart bottle. According to a report received here there is an interesting history behind this syrup and a reputation that lends it a strong selling power. One of the Queen City's prominent public men, who has large farm holdings outside the city, commenced tapping his maple bush some years ago. Care was taken to maintain the purity of the syrup and a reputation was quickly won for it. Hence, the reason that among those who can afford the money, such prices as $1 a bottle should be paid.

These two cases illustrate two extremes in the quality of syrup. The one was a cheap adulterated article, not worth even the low price asked for it. The other was the genuine article, with the reputation of a particular party behind it. Hence, the grocer could confidently vouch for its purity.

This then is one of the principal features to remember in connection with the handling of maple syrup in a grocery store. If the grocer is a good judge and puts a particular sample to the taste test, he knows, to a certain extent, what he is offering his customers. But otherwise—well there is the Winnipeg grocer for example. If a syrup is guaranteed as pure and if on enquiry—should the grocer think that step necessary—it is found that a reliable firm is behind it, then he can safely offer his trade this syrup as a genuine article. The first question to be solved is that of quality and points by which a clerk can talk it to purchasers.

Differing Opinions.

In the small country towns where, for a few weeks in the spring, farmers bring in new crop syrup, an opinion prevails that unless it is thick and dark in color it is not genuine. The writer has held this opinion for years and was inclined to look with suspicion upon the light brown thinner variety that is quite common now. It is explained that the new system of evaporators and the present ideas and methods of boiling are much in advance over the old time plan of the open pot with the smoke wreathing above it. The new evaporators are said to be responsible for the elimination of the pronounced dark color, but they have not in any way affected the quality of the syrup.

A customer who might buy syrup next November would probably ask how it could be genuine maple syrup with the sap season so long passed. In explanation of this natural question it may be said that one local firm is preparing to purchase 100,000 gals. of syrup in the Eastern Townships. They expect to sell considerable of this during the time of the new demand, but the rest will be held in cold storage for future trade.

Fake Syrups.

The subject of fake syrups would require a whole volume in the explanation of how these mixtures are manufactured. White sugar and maple sugar are said to be responsible for much of the syrup that is found on the market. This variety will at least have a slight maple taste, thanks to the maple sugar used. But there are some that do not contain one ingredient that can be traced to the maple tree. There is a maple flavor which is "prepared" especially for flavoring purposes.

What it really contains is a question, but it is not of particular concern. It is a fact that to people who have not tasted the real maple syrup, the faked article may appeal, because they know no different. The price, with others, makes up for the far-away taste that might be maple.

Up to the Dealer.

The dealer, therefore, is presented with a problem that he must solve for himself. Is he going to carry only what he is sure is a genuine maple syrup—something that he can hand out to his customers with confidence as to its quality? Is he, on the other hand, going to carry a questionable line that has no guarantee as to its quality, or again is he going to carry simply maple-flavored goods or those that are syrups, but without claim to the word maple.

The Toronto store, it is said, receives $1 for a bottle, perhaps about a quart, of its guaranteed syrup. The varieties under suspicion can be had for about 75 cents a gallon, perhaps less. In the one case the grocer is selling a genuine maple syrup and can get his price for it. In the other he does not know just what he is selling, and with such an article it is difficult to see how he can hope to look for anything but an intermittent demand and a light one. A Montreal dealer claims that the presence of the adulterated, and therefore cheaper article, on the market, is having a baneful effect, not only on the sale of the genuine article, but even on the sale of all those that lay claim to the word maple.

Carry Only Best.

The individual grocer will likely follow his general policy in the selection of his maple sugar stocks. He can stick hard and fast to his principle of carrying only the best, or if he should be that kind, he may include the cheaper for those who will be attracted by its price. It is hardly necessary to point out that the former is the ideal plan not only in regard to this one article of maple syrup but in all the goods carried on the shelves.

Maple syrup is always a favorite, but to bring a good demand during all seasons of the year its quality should be unquestionable and the grocer should take advantage of that fact.

The Toronto Retail Grocers Annual

One Hundred Members of Association Pass Pleasant Evening at St. Charles Hotel—Cards, Speeches and Music—Representatives of Wholesale Houses Deliver Congratulatory Addresses—Incidents of the Dinner Table.

Toronto, March 30.—It was indeed a jolly company, exhibiting all the qualities of good fellowship that gathered round the banquet board of the Toronto Retail Grocers' Association at the St. Charles Hotel. The attendance which was more than 100, was composed largely of men who are in keen competition during business hours but who are broad enough in mind to throw this to the winds and not to allow it to interfere with any organization which will in any way be a benefit to the trade. Such an eloquent expression of good fellowship among the grocers of any town or city, is to be highly commended as is also the good feeling existing between retailer and wholesaler, denoted by the presence of many representatives of wholesale houses at this banquet.

In the early part of the evening, those who are so accustomed to shuffling past-due accounts of delinquent customers proved adepts at the same act with the euchre deck and two hours passed pleasantly away. Following this there was that portion of the evening's entertainment in which all took an energetic part and each course of the dinner provided disappeared with great rapidity.

Benefit of Such Gatherings.

W. C. Miller, president of the Association, extended a hearty welcome to the members of the different business houses in the city which helped to make up the grocery trade, and commended meetings of this nature in which all were brought together and hoped that more would be held in the future.

The toast to "Our King" was proposed and responded to by all rising and singing the National Anthem.

J. S. Bond, retail grocer, in responding to the toast "Our Country," made a statesman's address. He said that such an important subject could not be done justice to in a short speech, but that every citizen, native born or otherwise, could not help but be proud of this country. He outlined the magnificent record that Canada has had in the past and the great possibilities that are ahead for the future.

The toast to "The Trade," was responded to by Phil. Brown, wholesale grocer, and Neil Carmichael, retailer. Mr. Brown was of the decided opinion that the grocers formed an important part in the commercial wheel of the country but were as a rule the most abused and least appreciated of any line of business.

"By the wholesalers," interjected Bailey Snow, amid laughter.

Plea for Shorter Hours.

"The continual efforts of the grocers are made to accomodate and please the public," he continued, "with long days of toil and financial results none too large. The grocers should work together for the improvement of conditions, including shorter hours, and better returns. There ought to be no reason why a merchant should have to keep his place of business open from 7 in the morning until 10 o'clock at night. The public should be educated to shop earlier, which could be done without inconvenience to themselves and would improve conditions greatly for the merchants."

Mr. Brown added that unnecessary price cutting should be stopped, and he also championed the cash system, reminding the merchants that at present they were the greatest charitable institution in the country.

Remove the Petty Jealousies.

Neil Carmichael spoke of the great progress in the grocery business during the past ten or fifteen years.

"Methods employed fifteen years ago," he declared, "have been greatly improved, much to the grocer's advantage. Many of the reforms when first instituted were regarded as injurious, but in most cases turned out favorably. But conditions even now are not by any means ideal; yet if the trade will stand shoulder to shoulder, getting away from the petty jealousies that sometimes exist, much can be done to mould better conditions in the trade.

W. C. MILLER, President,

Who Wielded the Chairman's Baton During the Post-Prandial Speeches.

"One of the things that should be improved is the hours in the grocery business. A man should be able to do a day's work from seven in the morning until six at night and business could be confined to these hours if the merchants only decided on this course and educated their customers along the same line."

Mr. Carmichael continued that he had been following the early closing rule and would not keep open after six o'clock for any money. He pointed out that the grocery trade at the present covers numerous lines and that the genuine merchant must apply careful study to this work.

Grocers as City Builders.

Ex.-Alderman D. Spence, in responding to the toast "Our City," credited the retail merchants and especially the grocers in doing much to build up the city, and with making it attractive by keeping their store fronts and property in good condition. He thought that the merchants did not get enough recognition from the civic officials or from either the provincial or federal governments. In order to do so it would be necessary, he considered, to appoint a strong legislative committee that would carefully look after matters at the city hall, at Ottawa and at the Ontario house. One matter in which he thought beneficial legislation should be secured was that of the collecting of accounts—a matter in which not only the grocers are interested, but the business men at large.

Alderman Alf. McGuire in response to the same toast said that the retail merchants were responsible to a large extent, for the present progressiveness of the city. They were a class of men who were up and doing, always putting forth efforts for something better. Mr. McGuire went into several municipal questions regarding the general advantages to the city and health of the citizens.

Power of the Dealer.

The next toast "Our Association" was responded to by past-president D. McLean, who referred to the many reforms that have been undertaken by the association since formation. One was the early closing issue, which, although not altogether successful, had nevertheless its educative value. He said that the grocers were a mighty power in the country and were gradually becoming recognized as such.

Treat the Traveler Courteously.

Frank Johnston in proposing "The Drummers," pointed out that a courteous welcome should be extended to the representatives of every wholesale house. During his business life he had never turned a traveler away discourteously as he felt that every man should at least have a chance to present his goods.

Herb Moore in responding said he was pleased to have the grocers remember the drummer in this way. Travelers do appreciate a courteous reception and it is a good paying investment as the wholesaler should be the retailer's friend and were generally found to be ready to help him.

Did Not Forget the Ladies.

The ladies were not forgotten in the hour of pleasure and when the toast to "The Ladies" was sounded, one hundred glasses glimmered from the outstretched hands of one hundred men, and three hearty cheers were given in feminine behalf. This important toast was ably responded to by J. F. Howitt and J. S. Bond in complimentary terms.

The last toast of the evening, "The Fruit Trade," was championed by T. Vance, who spoke of the wisdom of retailers giving every traveler a patient hearing. He was more pleased to know the grocers because most of them had started at the bottom rung of the ladder and worked their ways upward.

These features of the evening were interspersed by musical numbers. Messrs. Howitt and Gorrie were heard in a duet; T. F. Sylvestre and Mr. Gorrie in songs; West Williams in his own words "tooted his own horn," in a parody on "Put on your old Grey Bonnet," while J. F. Howitt told some very interesting and catchy stories.

Sparks From the Banquet Board.

A neat menu and program card decorated the tables and under the toast to the ladies was an inscription :

God made the world and rested.
God made man and rested.
Then God made woman ;
Since then neither God nor man has rested.

It was noticeable that several of the speakers during the evening complained that, "this speechmaking has been forced upon me." J. F. Howitt introduced a little story along that line : "A bridegroom who had not developed the art of oratory, as is the custom at the wedding feast was called upon to reply to the toast to the bride. Getting to his feet, one hand was placed on the bride's shoulder as he commenced, "I might say that this thing has been forced upon me."

"On account of the lateness of the hour" was an excuse for many of the orators to cut down their prepared orations.

W. C. Miller with his genial smile and newly starched vest made an attractive as well as an efficient chairman.

D. Spence remarked that "the whims of the faddists get more recognition from our legislators than the business reasoning of retail merchants." Copies to be sent to Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Sir James Pliny Whitney.

As much applause greeted the parliamentarian address of J. S. Bond on "Our Country" than would greet the oration of any "big gun" from Ottawa or Queen's Park.

Did anybody see Bailey Snow refuse one of the supper courses ? There was an evident shortage of eatables in that section of the table.

Everybody expected listening to an appeal on behalf of the ladies from David Bell. It is said he prefers entertainments where the feminine sex is represented.

Fred Thorne and Frank Johnston kept order at the lower ends of the tables, while the comfort and ease of the guests were attended to by J. C. Beaumont and R. Davies.

Olive Oil Scarcer with Greater Demand

Peculiar Situation Engaging Attention of all Handlers of the Oil—Output Smaller Than for Many Years—Some Information as to the Manner of Growth of Olive and Perils That Encompass it.

By J. W. Bryans.

Reports recently received from Europe on the olive oil situation says that the output this year will not be sufficient to supply even the home demand. While this may be an exaggeration, still it goes to show that the position is of such a nature as to engage the attention of all handlers of olive oil. It is generally agreed by dealers that not for many years has the output of oil been so small as this season, and, with the growing demand, it is indeed lamentable.

The opening prices for this season's shipments were about twenty per cent. over those of last year. But the prices of last year's output have been gradually rising, the result of the knowledge becoming general that the new crop would be a partial failure. The increase in price, therefore, has only been about 5 per cent. over the price of the old crop in December last. The result will be that the retailer will have to charge thirty cents for the six and a half ounce bottle which he has been selling at twenty-five cents, while the retail price of the larger sizes will increase in proportion.

Subject to Fluctuations.

The olive oil market is subject to fluctuations, the same as many other articles that the grocer handles. "Almost as unstable as wheat," was the way one dealer described it.

About one and a half years ago, prices were high. About one year ago there came a slight reduction. Then as this year's crop began to develop and unfavorable reports about it were handed down, the prices began to strengthen until the present time quotations are fully twenty per cent. higher than one year ago.

The failure of the last crop of olives has been occasioned by heavy rains in the olive producing section during the growing season. And, besides the climatic conditions, the olives were attacked by insects which destroyed a large part of the yield. The result of the failure of the olive crop and the greatly decreased output of the oil, will mean an extreme scarcity of this article, especially the finest grades. There seems to be no doubt that higher prices will be seen as the season advances and supplies become smaller.

One dealer in speaking of the situation said : "It is not only higher prices that I am taking into account, but the fact that the oil will almost be unobtainable at the end of the season." Another dealer admitted that conditions pointed to higher prices but added that as the next season's crop began to grow, it might have some effect on prices. However, with supplies now extremely small, and next season's crop several months off, everything points to a stronger market.

Increase in Demand.

The increase in the demand for olive oil within the past few years, has been wonderful and nowhere have sales been larger than in America. This continent uses more olive oil at present than any other part of the world. This increased consumption has also had its effect on prices, and nothing but a further increase in demand is expected. The increase in the sale of olive oil has been induced to some extent by physicians recommending it for its medicinal properties. Still, while a great deal of it is taken as a medicine, there is a steady increase in its use for cooking, as it is said to be highly nutritive, and regarded by some as more wholesome than animal fats.

Some History.

The olive has but recently come into its own, yet it's history dates back to the Flood. Those who are familiar with the Bible will recall how Noah sent a dove out from the Ark, and how it finally returned bearing an olive branch. Ancient history of the other kind tells us that the Romans taught its cultivation. It was extended through Italy, and beyond into the south of France. There it has attained its best growth, although it is produced quite extensively in Italy. Then there are the Spanish olives.

For many hundreds of years, the inhabitants of the town of Grasse on the slopes of Roequevignon, have devoted the winter months to garnering the olives and in preparing the oil, which is now used so extensively, all over the world.

Care of Tree.

Great care is taken of the trees during the spring and summer months. The ground about them is well loosened, and they are frequently and judiciously pruned. It has been found, strange to say, that woolen rags make the best fertilizers. But in spite of every care, the harvest depends upon the weather. The olive tree is subjected to different sicknesses, one of which is the "muffa," caused by the heavy humidity produced by lack of sun and winds.

The Harvest.

The harvest lasts many weeks, and is carried on in some districts in the primitive fashions of hundreds of years ago. The inhabitants sally forth with long poles and beat the trees till all the ripe berries are off. Those that are not yet matured remain on the boughs, and the oil obtained from them in the spring is of a much finer quality, and is greater in quantity than those gathered during the winter.

Nice is now the chief market for French olive oil, though Grasse remains the centre of the olive factory district of France.

Italy's Olive Yards.

The olive season in Italy is also an important institution and lasts from November till February. Olive trees grow all over the Tuscan plains and valleys and the slopes of the hills are covered with olive yards, built one above the other in stone-banked terraces many hundreds of years old. The work of picking is tedious and every man, woman and child is engaged in the occupation during the season. The men climb the trees and gather the berries from the branches, while the others pick those that strew the ground. The olives are stored for a time and are then crushed to extract the oil. The amount of oil contained differs according to the species, but averages 10 to 12 per cent., as it is estimated that 240 litres of good berries produce 24 litres of purest oil.

The Handling.

At one time the handling of olive oil was confined wholly to druggists, but now it can be found on the shelves of all the leading grocers. Recommended by physicians, and possessing excellent medicinal qualities, the dealer has an argument that should be most valuable in making sales. And once a customer has been induced to purchase, she generally continues buying. The store which can build up a reputation for handling the best grade, will not only get trade in this line but it acts as a magnet in drawing other business. The quality of the oil is an important factor and this should be kept in mind by dealers in purchasing.

Some Substitutes.

A circular on olive oil recently issued, stated: "Olive oil on the label doesn't always mean pure olive oil in the bottle. Much of it is cotton seed oil. You see, cotton seed oil is very much cheaper, so the manufacturer with an elastic conscience mixes a generous quantity in with his olive oil. That gives him a greater profit, but it also gives you a mighty poor, ill-tasting, bad odored oil. Yet this manufacturer calls his products pure. So it is, pure cotton seed oil. It's astonishing what a great quantity there is of cotton seed oil masquerading as olive oil."

There is a great deal of adulterated olive oil, no doubt, but Canada seems to be generally free from it, as was shown by a recent government report. But, the dealer in order to protect himself should buy reliable brands, and see that it is marked "Pure olive oil," when pure olive oil is wanted. Next in importance to purity is the flavor of the oil. This has a good deal to do with the sale. Another feature to be considered is brilliancy. Olive oil may be pure and have a good flavor but if it is not brilliant, it will not sell as easily. The container also plays an important part.

Oil Peculiarities.

When the oil is subjected to the cold, it thickens and becomes almost solid, somewhat resembling lard in appearance. This does not affect the quality for when the temperature changes it goes back to its former state. The frost, however, affects its brilliancy and the dealer should attempt to keep it at an even temperature. It should not be exposed to the sun as this also affects its color. Dealers should advise customers to wipe the mouth of bottle after using as the oil on the outside will turn rancid. The oil will keep for any reasonable length of time, if the bottle is kept securely sealed up.

Dealers should therefore get behind this line with confidence as it may be made an important item in every grocer's business.

The clerks should be thoroughly instructed in regard to its merits, so that they may be able to talk intelligently to customers in regard to it. Displays should be made on the counter and when the salesman has completed his sale, he may introduce this line to the customer.

People generally, and especially ladies, are always very interested in anything that will benefit their health, and olive oil can be made a strong feature in your advertising with good results.

Where Country Dealer Pointed Way

Striking Contrast in Financial History of Three Men Once Travelers for One Wholesale House—The Lesson Taught by Obscure Country Merchant Who Saved While in Debt—Punctuality Talks.

By Henry Johnson, Jr.

SAVE MONEY—

This does not mean that you will buy closer and save money on your purchases, nor that you will cut expenses and save money, nor yet that you will live more frugally and save the difference. It means that you will begin now and put aside, out of your business, into some savings institution where you can get from 3 per cent. to 4 per cent. interest on it, $50, $7[illegible]00 or any other sum over these. The only stipulation is that YOU MUST DO THIS EVERY MONTH.

There it is in a nutshell; but while the simplest, most direct way to do things is the easiest and most obvious, that way is seldom followed because its following admits of no discussion. The thing is, simply: do this and you will unconsciously build up a competence; and the time is NOW.

The Objections.

I know objection will be made on many hands about as follows:

"I have too many debts to pay."

"I need all my money to run my business."

"So many people fail to pay me that I can never get $50 ahead."

"I can take better care of my own money than any savings institution."

"What do I want with 4 per cent. when I can make 30 per cent. in my business?"

I have to say, in reply to all this, that you can find the answer in your own present condition. Have you made money? Can you show dollars laid aside where you can reach them in case of need? Are you of a saving, careful, frugal disposition, or do the pennies get away easily? Find the need in your own nature and seek the answer in what you have failed to accomplish.

I'll tell you a true story.

One day last summer three men sat at lunch in one of the down town restaurants in Montreal.

They were friends of long standing. Years before they had worked together for a large wholesale grocery house. One was still a salesman for that house; another was a broker "on the street;" the third was now a country grocer. They were glad to meet again and were having a jolly good time during the 30 minutes they spent together, the first meeting in over five years. They swapped stories of mutual progress and each told the others how he was getting along.

Not a Red Cent.

It developed during the conversation that the salesman and the broker had each enjoyed good incomes. The salesman had averaged $2,000 per year; the broker had run from $2,500 to $2,700 during the same time. But the only man who had a "red cent" to show for his life up to that time was the country grocer; and he showed something like $16,000 actual possessions, all earned during the five years since last these three had met.

City-like, there was no "feeling" about this; the city men were glad to see the country dealer get on faster than they could. But, at the end of the meal, the broker leaned over towards the salesman and said, with a smile of deep sincerity: "Tolerton, I'd give my little finger—yes, I'd give that finger right there (pointing to it) to know how he does it. You can't beat that fellow." Tolerton agreed, but he turned to the grocer and asked: "How DO you do it, Wilson?"

Saved When in Debt.

Thereupon Wilson outlined exactly the plan I have placed before you in this article. He began to put aside cold dollars before he was well out of debt. In fact, he owed some thousands of dollars when he began. He had been carrying a burden of debt which had run up to a monthly drain of some $300 to work off. When he had got that down to a point where the monthly call was for about $100, he took what might seem like a queer resolution. He determined to put aside $200 per month, on the 10th day of each month, rain or shine, sick or well. He determined, at the same time, that he'd continue to pay off his old debts just as he had been doing and that he'd not buy a single bit of merchandise, nor anything else, in excess of his ability to discount promptly within the ten-day limit. He reasoned that, if the business had been able to carry $300 per month for others, it could carry it just as well for him.

So Simple, But—

It seemed a simple story and the plan seemed simple, too; yet the two city men shook their heads, saying they certainly never could do it themselves. "It's not the big things," said Tolerton. "Here am I, really in need of a new suit of clothes, but I have put off buying one for nearly two months. I can do without that kind of thing easily enough. But in the meantime I have smoked up enough cigars and taken enough needless car rides to buy a suit." "Yes," replied the broker, "how are you going to get around that tremendous force of habit?" The grocer told them, simply enough, to do as he had done; put the money away out of reach while yet he had it, so it could not be frittered away in ways such as those. "Put aside $25 out of your next monthly check, each of you," he said. "That will start things and by the time you have $100 saved up you yourself will be the last man to break in on the saving."

And that gets us to the basic point of this entire matter; the habit of saving which such action implants in our natures. Nor is this simply a lecture for the young fellows—though they can well take it to heart. It is meant for men who never saved a dollar in their lives and who have reached the age of forty with only such resources as their business may have made for them in spite of their own proneness to spend. Think it over, friends.

Punctuality Talks.

Punctuality is one of the most valuable habits about a business. That sounds trite enough. But it is hard to force home into the average clerk's intelligence. I have six who belong at the store at prompt seven o'clock. Recently I noticed that first one and then another was drifting in at 7.10, 7.15, 7.20 and one at 7.30. I decided that it was time to call a halt. I gathered them all together into the shipping room and told them just what I was after. I said: "Now, boys, this may look like a small matter to you, and I am willing and ready to believe that not one of you has thought much about how serious a question this is. But I'll show you just what it means and then you can see for yourselves. We'll suppose all of you are getting $1 per day for ten hours' work, which is very nearly what our store hours amount to now. That figures ten cents an hour. If six of you are late 15 minutes, we have lost one hour and a half—15c. worth of time—the profit on $3 worth of sugar. If any of you happens to be getting more than $1 per day, you can easily figure out the extra cost to us.

"But that is not all. You must figure on how much one of you could accomplish in an hour's brisk work here in the morning clearing up and getting things ready for the day.

The Valuable Time.

"Nor is this all. You must consider that, as you know, time early in the morning is worth more than at any other period of the day. Your employer pays you wages during many afternoons when it would be [illegible] for him to send you home and deduct the time from your pay.

"Nor is this all. If you are all late, the orders are not ready for the delivery wagons and that time is wasted. people don't get their goods, the entire business is for that day a failure.

"Nor does even this cover all the trouble. If you are all late, early customers will not get attention, but go somewhere else, and to that extent is your employer unable to get the money wherewith to pay wages.

"These things are not ill-natured objections on my part; they are simply business requirements and I hope you will see it in this way."

I have had no more trouble since then.

PUBLISHED EVERY FRIDAY

MAPLE PROBABILITIES.

New maple syrup was expected to be offered for sale in Montreal this week before this number was issued. The reports from the Eastern Townships predict a good run of sap with anything like favorable weather. Several samples of the new syrup have been received in Montreal and it has been stated that the price will likely be $1.10 to $1.15 a gal. This is a general quotation. In the smaller towns where the farmers sell directly to the consumers or through the local grocers the price is likely to be higher. In fact, letters have been received stating that much higher prices were looked for by the makers and that offers had been received for it. But a firm that bottles the syrup from the Townships has placed their opening price at the figures just quoted.

WEIGH AND COUNT.

All dealers, and especially those in the country should be particularly careful these spring days in the weighing and checking of all country produce brought for sale into their establishments.

A few days ago two country women entered a store in a small Ontario centre with butter and eggs to sell. In the chatter going on the merchant did not take the trouble to record the quantities of each although he did weigh and count in a perfunctory manner, and carried the figures in his head. When the time came for settling up, each woman claimed respectively, one pound of butter and one half dozen eggs more than he had allowed them. He had mixed their supplies in with other produce and so could not well prove his contention, so paid the difference and let the matter rest at that. When the two left the store, however, the dealer declared to those who had listened to the dispute that "he knew he was right."

But he didn't know he was right; at least he didn't know it enough to prove the women to be wrong, which he should have been able to do. It wasn't much of a loss he sustained but it would probably be large enough to wipe out what little profit he would have on handling the goods he purchased. From that standpoint it was bad business.

The Grocer does not want to have any dealer think the country women are prone to "do" him whenever and wherever she can, but only urges the application of simple trade rules in transacting bargains with her.

EDITOR'S FOREWORD.

In the next issue of The Grocer, Henry Johnson, Jr., will tell in his convincing, practical way, some of the troubles that beset the merchant in connection with hiring help.

He will go into the heartburnings of the dealer who wants a man for a certain price to do a certain work, and who finally comes to feel that no suitable one, in all the big world, is going to offer for the position. Also, Mr. Johnson will discuss the possibilities of raising the standard of the men who are grinding out an existence behind a grocery counter or on a delivery rig.

And, in addition, there will be special articles on a number of seasonable topics, and concentration upon one or two in particular, along with the practical methods that make this paper such a welcome visitor in every store.

Next week, too, we will revive that "Question and Answer" department which so many of our readers have missed since it was discontinued under pressure of circumstances. It will be a good issue. Watch for it!

A TIME TO SELL SMOKED MEATS.

Easter is a time when the dealer can, with a little extra effort, increase greatly his sales of ham, smoked meats and bacon.

To do this he must first look to his stocks and obtain supplies before it is too late. Then he is in a position to go out after the trade. In spite of any small demand which might occur he can, if he so determines, sell these goods and sell good quantities of them.

Advertisements in the daily papers will pay well in most cases; a well-dressed window is also a good salesman, but both of these backed up by personal talks of the dealer himself are bound to bring results.

THINGS TO KNOW.

THERE ARE FOUR THINGS A GROCER MUST KNOW if he would gather the most from his business. They are: the stock he has on hand; the amount of money he owes; the amount of money that is owing to him, and, the absolute knowledge that no goods leave his establishment without the cash, or a proper record having been made of them. The last is first.

It always is good to know how the stock is going out, but it is better to know what is coming because of its going. It is good to know how much money one owes that the financial craft may not founder. But that last essential, "nothing to go out without something staying in," is about the best of the lot from a business point of view.

It is a great source of worry to the merchant—that keeping track in the books of his outgoing goods. And then too, it is so easy to say: "Oh, I'll enter it up when I'm not busy." But the trouble is, he don't enter it up, he forgets. When he stands behind the counter wondering what Mrs. Brown's order consisted of, he thinks he remembers. But nine times out of ten he doesn't.

It seems a little thing, that missing of an item or two in charging, but if some one could total up the losses that merchants in Canada have sustained from this cause alone during the past year the result would surely be astounding. Don't bank too much on memory; put down your figures when they're fresh in your mind if you would protect yourself

APPETITES REGAINED.

With the passing of the Lenten season, and the consequent breaking of the mental shackles that have bound many a good appetite to a scanty diet it behooves every dealer in this broad land to awake to his opportunities.

There is no doubt he can, if he desires, make his windows, his counters, and his well-stocked shelves, speak in language appealing and compelling to those returning to normal habits. He can arrest the hurrying footsteps of the passing "fastee" and can by judicious selection create a longing that will start a stampede of small proportions when the ban is lifted. Think of all the nice things these folks have wanted, and wanted badly during the past few weeks and could not have! There are any number of them! and when you have come to a conclusion in your own mind as to what sort of a combination you would give to a cousin, castaway on a desert island with only a few slight things to eat, put them in the window! and exercise some thought in putting them there.

Toronto Board of Trade men are reported as seeking an amendment to the law so that a man selling a store stock, en bloc, would be compelled to take an affidavit, giving all the details of the credit accounts to the purchaser, and rendering him liable to arrest in any part of Canada in the event of falsification. This would be good legislation, and it is expected Hon. Mr. Foy, Attorney-General of Ontario, will give it sympathetic consideration.

April Suggestions for Every Dealer

Some Methods Which May Help to Make of Housecleaning Time a Period Prosperous as Others—Pushing of Seasonable Goods—Demonstrating Germinative Properties of Seeds—Selling of Fruits and Green Goods.

Complaints are often made by merchants that trade during April is, as a rule, quiet, because customers are busily engaged in spring housecleaning. This should to a certain extent work to the advantage of the dealer, as it gives him an excellent chance to push the sale of goods which the housewife uses in this work.

At this season of the year good displays should be made of soaps, cleansers, scrub brushes, wall paper, and other articles in demand at this time. The merchant would do well to have a catchy window display of these articles early, so that the housewife, when requiring them will know where to go.

No Sales Decrease.

This month being broken by the Easter season should show no decrease in sales to the merchant who is active. Plans for the Easter season should be carefully prepared, that the best results may be secured. Eggs, ham, fruits and other articles that appeal to customers now should receive attention. Besides window display, it would be well to set aside one counter for the display of eggs, ham and meat products. Tasty and clean counter displays with a plentiful use of price cards should be conducive to an increase of sales.

Selling Seeds.

Another important line which the grocer should put some force behind during April, is the seed department. This is a line which besides paying a fair profit, can be made a drawing card for other business, if properly conducted. To sell seeds they must be well displayed and this should be started early in the season to get the best results. For garden seeds in packages, seed firms supply holders which makes their display easy. If you handle garden seeds in bulk it would be well to exhibit them in glass jars, with the name and price on each for the information of the customer. Timothy, clover, alsike and similar seeds can be shown either in the original containers, or in dishes. It might be wise to have a magnifying glass that customers may examine seeds, but your guarantee of quality, backed by the belief that the seeds are the highest grade, should be the best selling power. A window display bringing forth some new idea will attract trade, while customers may be interested in growing exhibits, a strong point in connection with germination. Nothing is of greater interest or more convincing to the farmer than a practical demonstration of the productiveness of the seeds he is asked to buy.

Fruits and Green Goods.

With the approach of the warmer weather, conditions improve for the handling of fruits and green goods. As the weather becomes milder, the streets are frequented more by people and, as these lines are bought more readily when seen, it would be well to have frequent window displays, so as to attract passing customers, and also a place set apart in the store for showing them. These are lines, which can be handled much better when large quantities are sold, as supplies can be bought oftener and therefore goods are fresher. For this reason, sales should be made as large as possible, so that a shipment can be run off in a short time. Many merchants handle these lines because they act as a magnet for other business. A customer will come in to order some fruit, or green goods and will perhaps think of some other article she wishes, or the clerk may be able to interest her in other goods. In order to be conducted at a profit, care must be taken to sell goods quickly, so that none of the stock will become unsalable.

Canned Goods.

This is a season of the year when the home supply of fruit is getting into very small proportions, and it is therefore an excellent time to bring canned goods and dried fruits into prominence. Of course every merchant knows the value of display in selling these lines, but an extra effort should be put forth now. Advertising, instructing the clerks to introduce them, and by telling customers different ways to prepare them, will all help in the desired object.

The house cleaning season is at hand and should bring the merchant to thinv of the appearance of his store, and put it in shape for the summer months, making any changes which he believes would be beneficial. Fixtures, awning refrigerator, store house and wagon should all receive attention in the general spring clean-up.

TRADE IN NOVA SCOTIA.

Excellent Progress for Spring Business Down East.

Halifax, March 30.—The prospects for a good spring trade in the wholesale grocery lines are excellent. The business during the winter was considered very good, the wholesalers feeling the benefit of the operations of the lumber camps throughout the Province. With the exception of a few lines prices generally are steady. Dealers say that there is a probability of a near advance in the price of canned salmon as the stocks of the best quality on the Pacific Coast are pretty well cleaned up. The stocks of prunes and evaporated apples are also light, and higher prices are anticipated.

The old stocks of Canadian onions are about used up, but some small shipments of new onions from Antigua have already arrived here, and new Bermuda onions will be along in the course of a few days.

Granulated sugar is steadv at $4.65, and United Empire at $4.55. Fancy Barbadoes molasses is 33 cents in barrels, and 29c per gallon, in puncheons.

Hog prices are easier. Some good medium-sized hogs were sold here this week at nine cents, the lowest price of the season.

Eggs are down to 23 cents, and are dropping every day.

Potatoes are in good demand, and fruit is firm at unchanged prices.

FLOUR AND BREAD.

Hamilton Bakers Advancing the Price of the Small Loaf.

It is reported from Hamilton that the bakers of that city have felt it necessary to advance the price of their bread from 5 to 6 cents for the small loaf. The reason, they urge, is the increase in the size of the loaf, forced by the legislation passed in Toronto last year

Prices of flour at the present time are quite satisfactory to dealers. Compared with those of a year ago, prices rule from 30 to 40 cents per barrel lower. The prices ruling in Toronto at present and a year ago are compared below:

Manitoba wheat flour	Apr. 1, 1910.	At Present
1st patent	5.70	5.40
2nd patent	5.30	4.90
Strong bakers ...	5,10	4.70
Winter Wheat.
Straight rollers ...	5.10	4.45

Early Closing Question Stirs Calgary Dealers

Calgary, March 30.—Calgary retailers were to have made history this week, but owing to the laxity, apparently, of a Winnipeg official, they were not able to do so. But it is probable that in a week or so something may be done along lines of progressive local legislation to vindicate the good name of the local merchants.

An agitation has been on in this city for some time for the dealers to close at noon on Saturday, and not open up again until Monday morning. The retail section of the Board of Trade met on March 16, and discussed the scheme but nothing definite could be done because the section lacked information covering the early closing point in entirety. So it came about that March 23rd was set for the final word, and in the meantime the secretary of the local section was to get in touch with the Winnipeg folks and secure a copy of the by-law of that city.

The meeting of March 23rd was a good one, but the matter touching the burning question of early closing could not be finished because the secretary had not been able to secure his necessary papers from Winnipeg. And again the discussion was postponed one week. It was decided, however, that the secretary should communicate with the city solicitor concerning the power of the city, under the present charter, to enforce the early closing by-law.

The same official will also be requested to inform the section of the provisions of the law governing the operation of fruit stands and confectionery establishments on Sunday, as Calgary dealers claim they lose considerable business through these places being wide open on the Sabbath.

The retailers will meet the wholesalers to go into the question of the latter selling goods to others than bona fide retailers. No serious complaint, however, is made.

It was also agreed that in the future no member of the section shall sign a petition for a half holiday for special events unless it has first secured the endorsation of the organization.

Practical Methods of Retail Stores

St. John Merchant Adds Cut Flowers to Stock as Saturday Special—Pleasing Form of Circulars—Winnipeg Dealer Overcomes Prejudice—Calgary Dealers Give Away Flour—Baking Time Card—Revelstoke Merchant's New Scheme.

Cut Flower Special.

St. John, N.B., March 30.—One of the up-town retail grocers has added cut flowers to his stock as a "Saturday Special." Each Friday night a number of tall vases are placed in one of the show windows, with a very tempting display of roses, carnations, etc., and with the lights turned on a very pretty effect is produced. The display not only attracts attention in itself, but it also draws attention to other goods shown in the adjoining windows. There has been quite a demand for the flowers and usually the buyer who goes in for these, also sees something else that appeals to him or her, and other purchases result.

Believes in Circulars.

Toronto, March 30.—F. Simpson and Sons, dealers in fruits, fish, cut flowers, game, and fancy groceries, believe in the selling power of the circular letter. But they also believe that the letter in question, to return the best results, must be gradually and gently broken to the reader.

For instance in a recent sheet they introduced the goods they had to sell in this manner:—

"We concentrate our energies upon pleasing our patrons; we persevere in our endeavor to give them the best goods at the right prices. We find that our efforts are appreciated and our trade is steadily increasing. Give us your orders and depend upon having them filled promptly, carefully, and satisfactorily. We handle only best quality goods."

Then came a list of specials in fish, groceries, fruits, vegetables, provisions, and flowers, arranged concisely in departments, the whole making quite an effective circular.

Gave Away Flour.

Calgary, Alta., March 30.—The Howson, McEwen Co., grocery dealers of this city, are conducting a novel competition, in which they are giving flour to charitable institutions. This competition ends on March 31st.

Their announcement commences as follows:—

"Do you want to help in a good practical way, some charitable institution? We are holding a voting contest, to March 31st. Our plan is to give 500 pounds of the best flour on the market to one of the following charitable institutions: The General Hospital, the Holy Cross Hospital, the Salvation Army Rescue Home, and the Children's Aid Society. With every dollar purchase made at our store you will be allowed a vote and two extra votes with every purchase of a sack of our flour."

Baking Time Card.

Montreal, March 30.—A local grocer recently inaugurated a new scheme that had the effect of inducing quite a lot of new trade to come his way.

He had printed a neat table of weights and measures, along with a table giving the time that should be allowed in the baking of certain lines of food stuffs.

In his weights and measure tables were noted the following:—4 teaspoonfuls of liquid equal one table spoonful; 2 cups of solid butter equal one pound; 2 cups of granulated sugar equal one pound; 1 pint of milk or water equals 1 pound.

Some of the card items were:—Beans, 8 to 11 hours; gingerbread, 20 to 30 minutes; potatoes, 30 to 45 minutes; cookies, 10 to 15 minutes; bread, brick loaf, 40 to 50 minutes.

At the bottom a neat advertisement of the store was printed. These cards were made of stiff paper with a holder attached so that it might be hung up by the customer if desired.

Relieves the Thirsty.

London, Ont., March 30. — Harry Coates is a grocer who believes in the policy of having as many conveniences as possible in a store for the benefit of his customers. In his store in South London he has provided for thirsty people by the installation of a sanitary enamelled basin situated just where every one can see and feel it was put there expressely for them. There is always a glass or cup, within easy distance of the tap. Mr. Coates finds that his customers often taken advantage of the presence of the basin, to refresh themselves, and he also says that many persons who are not customers of his drop in once and a while to have a drink and maybe purchase an article or two.

Prizes For Word Hunters.

Revelstoke, B.C., March 30.—C. B. Hume & Co., general merchants, believe in interesting the children, and a recent advertisement in the effort read:—

"Every child in Revelstoke should read C. B. Hume & Co.'s advertisement in the Mail-Herald of Wednesday, March 8th, 1911. See the beauty doll and boys' sweaters in the window given as prizes to the lucky boy and girl that finds the greatest number of misspelled words in the advertisement of that date Now, children, be good and pay attention. To the lucky girl under 12 years we will give that beauty doll in the window, and to the lucky boy under 12 years the sweater coat who finds the greatest number of misspelled words in our advertisement of this issue. The answers are to be posted in a mail box in the dry goods department, second floor.

The selling possibilities of such a scheme are apparent at once, because all answers were to be posted in a box on the second floor, and as the parents would come with the child in the majority of cases, a chance would be given to introduce goods to them.

Social Functions.

Lindsay, March 30.—"I claim," said L. A. Primeau, recently, "that it pays to cater to the ladies, especially during the social season. The season for at-homes, afternoon teas, and other affairs, which has just ended, has been a very profitable one because of the fact that the ladies knew what they wanted and we kept a good stock of suitable cakes, olives, and such things on hand."

Encourage Clerks.

Toronto, March 30.—One of the mail order houses in this city encourages its employes to make every effort to build up the business. Any suggestions that any clerk may have, no matter what position he holds in the store, is gladly welcomed. If he has a proposition which he thinks would better the business he is given an opportunity by the manager of the department to prove its adaptability, and if such suggestion is co considered valuable enough to put into force, the employe who made the suggestion is rewarded accordingly.

In this way the clerks are kept on the alert looking for methods of improving the business, and as a result many valuable suggestions are received and put into force each year.

Thinks Coffee Draws Trade.

Ottawa, March 30.—"I find," said a local grocer recently, "that handling a good brand of coffee attracts considerable trade, or at least holds trade together. I believe that I have several customers who deal with me for no other reason than that I handled a superior quality coffee.

Once a customer uses such a coffee, they generally stick to that grade and are not satisfied until they find some person who handles it. I try to sell coffee to every customer and by handling a high grade and keeping the quality uniform I find that my trade is gradually on the increase. Coffee is a line in which customers have to depend a great deal on the merchant as far as its quality and freshness are concerned, and he must have their confidence if he wishes to get their coffee trade."

Overcoming Prejudice.

Winnipeg, Man., March 16.—"I seldom experience any difficulty in selling a customer a brand of goods other than the one she asked for," said a dealer, the other day.

"Some magazines and manufacturers have aroused a certain feeling of distrust in the minds of consumers by branding the dealer who substitutes as one kind of a criminal, but I overcome this by explaining to the customer that it is no sin to offer something 'just as good' and that I am always convinced myself about the quality of an article before I place it in stock.

"I think, if customers have not enough confidence in the grocer to accept what he recommends, that there is something wrong with the grocer," he continued, "and that he must, at some time or other have abused their trust in him. Of course the unscrupulous dealer who recommends an inferior article because there is a little more profit in it, cannot expect the customer to place any dependence in his word."

J. I. Lalonde, who for some years has been a traveler for Hudon, Hebert & Co., Limited, Montreal, left recently for Saskatchewan, where he will go into business. He is succeeded by R. Fournier.

QUEBEC MARKETS

POINTERS—

Tapioca—Reduced 1c per lb.

Molasses—Car lots 28½c to 29½c.

Lard—Reduced ¼c.

Montreal, March 30.—The market during the week has been steady and business keeps well up to the mark that has already been set. There is no special feature to call attention in the general grocery list. Tapioca declined one cent a pound, but otherwise there has been no feature. It might be mentioned that the new crop in molasses is being booked up now and the orders are coming in freely. The crop is reported a good one and the price for car lots is put at 28½ to 29½ cents a gallon. Owing to the fact that consumption is likely to be large the market is quite firm, and the tendency upward. Shipments are for some time after the middle of May, it not being expected that any will be received before that time.

Maple sugar is expected on the market this week, although up to the middle of the week only a few samples had been received. Reports from the townships agree on the point that if the weather is at all favorable the run of sap will be copious and a good "crop" of sugar is expected. The opening price will likely be a little higher than last year. But, it is a little early yet to attempt to name the prospective price. One firm is quoting $1.10 a gal. and is receiving orders at that price.

Orders are beginning to take on a spring appearance and brooms, washing soda, cleansing powders, etc., are all finding a prominent place in the lists coming in. It is to be hoped that the retail trade are taking advantage of the approach of the new season to dispose of the goods that are especially in demand just now.

Sugar.—Locally, sugar is quieter this week than it has been for some time. Dealers stocked up freely with the beginning of the advance in prices and are now well supplied. Demand, therefore, from retailers has fallen off on that account. The primary market received a little set back during the early part of the week, but it is not generally thought that any weakness will result.

Syrup and Molasses.—There is a steady business passing in corn syrup, but in the near future it will have the opposition of new crop molasses and the new maple syrup. However, it has its own steady demand, although it might happen that the price now quoted would be lowered. There is no particular reason for this expectation beyond the fact that there will undoubtedly be added competition in the syrup line.

The new price of fancy molasses for May-June delivery has been given out as 28½ to 29½ cents, with the former prevailing. This price is for car lots the shipments to be to points outside the Island of Montreal. From one firm it was recently learned that out of from 12,000 to 15,000 puncheons annually imported into Canada probably less than 2,000 are received into Ontario and the west, the rest being consumed in Quebec. In each puncheon there is about 100 gals. The market is quite firm according to reports and is showing an upward tendency. One statement in review of the condition is that the crop has been a good one, but that consumption is likely to be heavy. The price is considered fair and is proving attractive to the trade as large orders have been received up to the present.

CANNED GOODS

Montreal.—There is practically nothing new to report in regard to canned goods. The situation is about where it was a week ago and where it will be a week from to-day from all appearances. There is a steady demand in most lines although it is a question whether canned fish are enquired for as heavily this week as usual. Peas are quite limited and, as previously stated, so are gallon apples. Corn is moving freely and tomatoes are steady. In canned fish high grade salmon and lobsters are the most active.

Toronto.—An increase in the demand for canned fish, particularly salmon, is noted by some firms, but the high prices ruling cause dealers to operate on a hand-to-mouth basis, while the consumption is somewhat curtailed by the high prices ruling and, as one dealer expressed it, consumers are beginning to regard salmon as a luxury. Canned vegetables are quiet but still maintain their firm position.

ONTARIO MARKETS

POINTERS—
Prunes—Advance 1c. lb.
Raisins—Higher.
Evaps.—Advance 1c. lb.

Toronto, March 30.—Wholesalers report that sugar sales have dropped off of late. This is not unexpected at this time as dealers stocked up freely when the market first started on the upward move. Although raws received a slight set-back at the beginning of the week, still the market is steady and the situation is expected to continue strong for a time, and an upward movement in refined is just possible when refiners have again to purchase supplies.

The firmness which has existed in certain lines of dried fruits has resulted in higher prices, as was expected. Prunes, which have been advanced a cent a pound are in extremely short supply and retailers have little choice in regard to sizes. Raisins are also higher as stocks are gradually decreasing, while the situation in the primary market shows no improvement. Evaporated apples are almost unobtainable at a time when the best season is usually just opening and holders are asking higher prices—as high as 14 cents being quoted. The scarcity in these important lines of dried fruits naturally has its effect on the others, so that firmness is noticeable in the whole list.

Dealers hope for an increase in the nut trade at Easter, as retailers generally give this line prominence at that time. Prices are steady. Brazil nuts are about off this market, and as yet no new stocks have appeared. Filberts are reported to be in smaller compass in the primary market than for several years, while reports from California say that the weather has been hard on the growing almond crop..

Sugar.—Raw sugar eased off a little at the first of the week but no weakness in the market is expected to result. Dealers still regard the market as in a strong position and an upward movement in refined is not unexpected at any time. One dealer said: "The sugar market still rules steady but the temporary setback in raws Rill delay the upward movement in refined longer than was thought. However, unless some new conditions arise to affect the market, a further advance in refined is quite likely as soon as refiners have to again make purchases." A new feature is the large Indian sugar crop which will likely take the place of Java in Japan, and as a result larger shipments of Java to America can be expected, although it is not considered that this will alter the situation to any marked extent. Wholesalers report that the movement of sugar during the past week has been slack, as can be expected after the large sales which have taken place since the market turned upward. It is reported that some of the refiners are still behind in their orders.

Syrup and Molasses.—Trade in corn syrups continues satisfactory, but the demand for maple syrup will likely show a decrease when the new maple products come on the market. Dealers however state that even when the new syrup is at its best there is a certain demand for the canned article. Molasses are quiet and unchanged.

Dried Fruits.—To those who have been following the market, an advance of one cent per pound in prunes is not unexpected. Supplies, which are extremely light, have been growing into smaller compass, so that higher prices were inevitable. Even at the advanced price, retailers have little choice of sizes, one dealer reporting that he had only one size of prunes to offer. The situation in prunes is very acute with no possibility of improvement. Wholesalers are also asking higher prices for raisins, and while choice seeded, in 16 oz. packets, have been ranging from 7½ to 8 cents, now dealers are asking 8 cents straight. The same is true of the other seeded lines and also of valencias. At stock taking time, wholesalers thought that raisin supplies were large enough to run them through, but recent checkings of stocks find them getting extremely low. One dealer said "If I had to buy raisins at the present time, I would have to pay higher prices than I am now selling at, the outlook is not particularly pleasant."

Tea.—A recent report on the tea situation says; "The general average of values in the primary market has again advanced to the level of that ruling at the end of last year, and with the future position clearly defined, it seems absolutely impossible to expect any further setback in prices for some months to come. It is evident that importations of Indian tea for the remaining portion of the season will be less than those for the same period last year, and merchants will obviously feed the market week by week with just a sufficient quantity to retain the keen competition which is now in evidence. With regard to the position of Ceylon tea, it is practically certain that no excess of quantity is likely to come to hand which will materially affect prices on the whole."

Coffee.—The coffee situation generally shows no change, with dealers throughout the country still refusing to buy, awaiting the sale of the 1,200,000 bags of Government coffe? which will be released during April. Willets & Gray's Journal says: "The current crops are about cleared up and it is perfectly proper to state that were it not for the government sales next month, the intrinsic strength of the coffee position would force values to a much higher level from sheer necessity. Perhaps the most important feature of strength of the actual position is the great scarcity of supplies in the hands of the consuming trade throughout the interior everywhere which will constitute a strong argument for the maintenance of good values for several months to come, as the government sales simply represent 24 days of world's consumption that is going on at the rate of 50,000 bags or more every day. Chicory within the past month has advanced 2 cents per pound, and is now quoted at 12 cents.

Spices.—The trade passing in spices continues about the same in volume. It is thought that mace, which has nearly doubled in value during the past year, will likely retain its high position. Prices show no change.

Nuts.—Trade is reported quiet, but may take on some life within the next week or so, as many grocers push their sale in the Easter season. Stocks of first quality are reported none too plentiful, with large supplies of low grades which are stained and find few buyers in Ontario. Little or no beans have been exported to the United States markets this year as stocks there are larger than in other years, Michigan having raised one of the largest crops on record.

Evaporated Apples.—"I cannot give you a quotation on evaporated apples," said one wholesaler, "because I am completely sold out." Other dealers said that their stocks bordered on the same state so that the usual trade in "evaps" will have to be diverted to some other line. Prices range around 13½ cents, with some firms asking even higher prices than that.

BRITISH COLUMBIA MARKETS.

Vancouver, March 30.—Market conditions are without particular feature. New Zealand butter is selling freely. A shipment of Australian brown onions has been received and is selling well. Green stuff is now on the market, with lettuce and cucumbers from Victoria. Eggs are coming in in large quantities. The price of eggs never dropped with such rapidity. The weather held cold, and with the sudden fine period, eggs were shipped in large quantities from Kansas and California. They arrived in fine shape, and to meet the competition the local article had to come down.

Tomatoes from Mexico and Florida have been affected in some instances with a fungus blight, resulting in their condemnation by the provincial inspector of fruit pests. The early supply comes from the south, and if the quality is not good, it will mean higher prices. Tomatoes will be grown on a large scale in the Okanagan this year, where one concern will put in 100 acres. When the season is on it is expected they will ship six carloads per week, two for the coast and the other four to go to Alberta.

NEW BRUNSWICK MARKETS.

St. John, N.B., March 30.—There was little change last week in the markets. Bananas are a little easier than last season and indications are for lower prices later on. Eggs are cheaper, henery eggs now being quoted at 22 and 23 cents, and case eggs at 20 cents per dozen. In feed, bran is higher while pressed hay in car lots and cornmeal in bags, is cheaper.

A cable received on Saturday by a local firm, was to the effect that an advance of one cent per gallon had taken place on fancy molasses. This, it was said, made the total advance from the low point equal to 2½ cents per gallon, landed here.

Purnell & Panter, Bristol, England, have recently had to enlarge their extensive pickle factory to cope with the extra trade. They manufacture pickles, pure malt vinegar and are the sole proprietors of the celebrated B. V. Sauce.

An attractive "Mollasses Cook Book," has been issued by The Dominion Malasses Co., Halifax, N.S. The covers are nicely printed in colors and the booklet contains some 40 recipes. These include ginger snaps, molasses candy, butter scotch, hermits, cookies, ginger sponge cake, etc., which will undoubtedly prove popular among the customers of any dealer. This is a splendid opportunity for retailers to increase the interest of their customers in molasses and they should not delay writing for copies of the booklet.

Biscuit Fabriek, "De Lindeboom," manufacturers of Frou-Frou, have secured from the United States Circuit Court, southern district of New York, a perpetual injunction against the Siegel-Cooper Company, compelling the latter to refrain from selling any other wafer or biscuit under the name of Frou-Frou.

Simple, But Oh, How It Sold Dates!

Here's a simple little thing one grocer did that brought him three days of splendid date sales.

He cut our advertisement of DROMEDARY DATES from a monthly magazine—we advertise in nearly all the good ones—and pasted it on the front of his window. Over it was a brush sign, "We Sell These," and in the window a display of the cartons with one open. He says he never sold so many dates in his life.

DROMEDARY DATES are sure to sell if people see them, because they are the finest selected fruit, wrapped carefully in oiled paper and packed in cartons. They're clean, fresh, and indefinitely moist. All jobbers.

To Profit from the Easter Appetite

Suggestions for Busy Grocers to Garner Trade From Opportunities Presenting Themselves at This Season—Originality of Eastern Dealer—A Window That Drew Custom.

Easter is fast approaching and grocers should be planning to profit from the pent up appetites of customers, who for a full six weeks have been closely confined to certain articles of food. By the time Easter arrives these will have worked up a craving for other lines of food, which should work to the advantage of the grocer. Good use can certainly be made of the coming festive season and grocers should seize the opportunity to secure their share of new business which the holiday is bound to create.

Easter is a time when the thoughts of all naturally turn to the table, and in this connection it is a rival to Christmas. This fact should not be forgotten. As Lent draws to a close people begin to think of "the good things to be had soon," and grocers should build on the appetites of the people.

Display is regarded as a valuable aid in making sales at any time, and particularly is this so at the Easter season. During the last few days of Lent the progressive merchant will have dainty displays in window and on counters that will appeal to the tastes of his customers. A window display properly arranged should be a valuable selling power at this time.

St. John Originality.

Eggs are associated with Easter and, of course, the grocer will give prominence to this line. Last year, a grocer of St. John had a cage in his window containing several hens. There was a plentiful supply of eggs on the window floor and a card reading "Fresh laid eggs for the Easter meal."

Ham is another article of diet which is largely used, and a display of this article, and eggs, with some other line which will appeal to customers' fancy, should be made. Do not show too many different lines, as it will detract attention from any one particular line, and so will not make sales. Show cards and price tickets can be used to good advantage in such a display.

Easter Flowers.

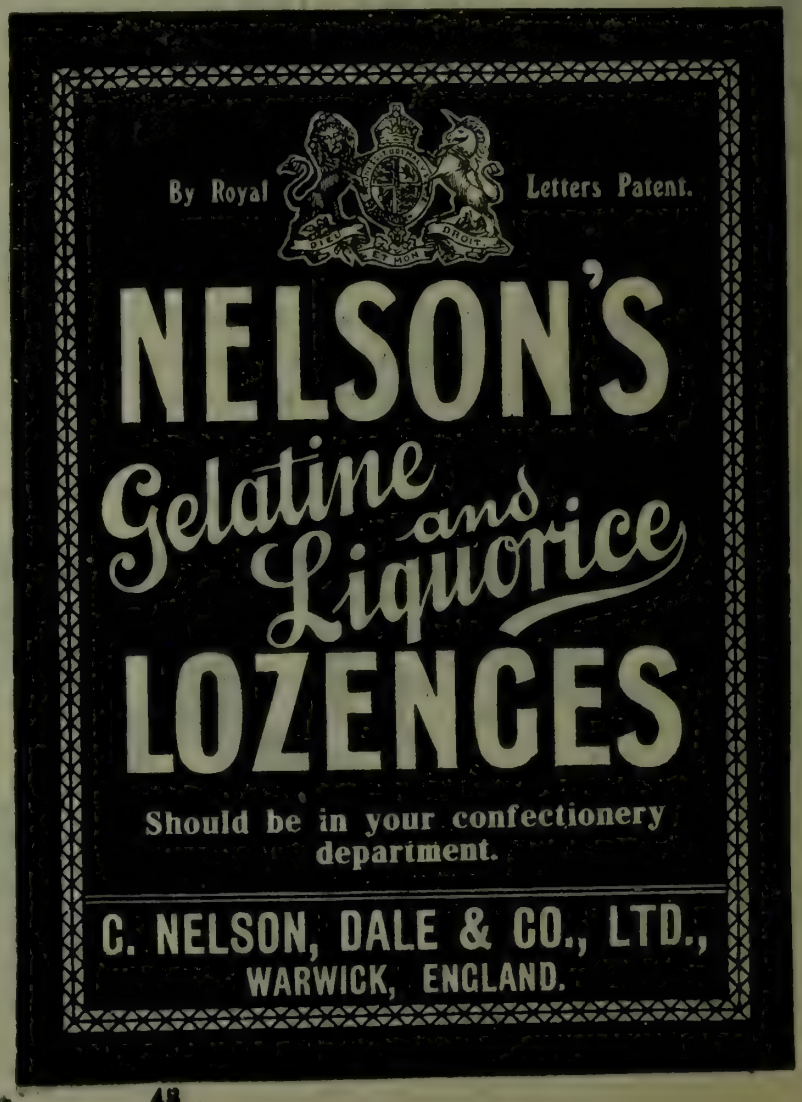
Easter lilies in the window trim or about the store will make it look much brighter and more Easterlike. A good many grocers handle flowers at this season of the year, for besides the business in this line itself, it attracts customers to the store and also adds drawing power. Care should be taken in ordinary flowers that enough may be had to make a proper showing, but that none may be left on your hands, as a customer's fancy for flowers drops to a certain extent when the season has passed.

Easter is also a season of the year when sales in such lines as lettuce, onions, tomatoes and strawberries may be increased, as they are lines which appeal to the people's appetite at this time. They may also be shown in the window, but when such lines as these and flowers are shown, it is well to make the fact known to the people by advertising, for if you simply display them, the attention of only those people who pass your store is attracted.

One Definite Window.

Last year one merchant gave particular attention to ham, eggs, tomatoes, strawberries and green goods, and had a window dressed with these articles. Three steps were made. In the centre of the bottom one there was placed a heaped-up basket of eggs with a display of ham on either side, and neatly printed price cards attached. On the next step lettuce, onions and similar articles were shown, while in the centre of the top step was a magnificent Easter lily with ripe tomatoes on one side and strawberries on the other. At the top was a show card "Suggestions for your Easter meals."

An excellent opportunity is afforded the grocer for increasing his sales at Easter time and an extra attempt should be made to interest customers and get new trade.



WESTERN ASSOCIATION MEETS.

Winnipeg, March 30.—At the recent meeting of the Western Retail Merchants' Association, the following officers for the current year were elected: President, John Dyke; first vice-president, A. T. Connell; 2nd vice-president, F. J. Walsh; treasurer, Geo. H. Hyndman; executive, W. T. Devlin, the retiring president; Horace Chevrier, the retiring vice-president; C. L. Charrest, W. G. Maybee and A. E. G. Lournan.

Some amendments to the by-laws of the association were made.

A short time ago a delegation from the association waited on Premier Roblin, and asked that a "small debt court" be established in Manitoba under the jurisdiction of stipendiary magistrates, with power to decide claims for debt up to $50. In their petition they stated that the present machinery for collecting small accounts is costly, cumbersome, inconvient and unsatisfactory; that many merchants are defrauded and suffer by reason of unscrupulous debtors taking advantage of the delays, leniency, and costly procedure of the present law; and that the present procedure for garnishment and attachment of debts is unsatisfactory and in its working discriminates in favor of the debtor.

It is possible that a bill will be presented before the next session of the Manitoba legislature.

Westward Ho!

THE opportunity for manufacturers and shippers of Eastern Canada, Europe and the States to introduce their goods to the Great West is now exceptionally favorable. The Westerner is a good spender at all times, and he has the money to spend. Why not get in on the ground floor? Our extensive connection with Western Canada and our sound financial standing, place us in a better position to build up sales for you than any other firm in the West.

We maintain track warehouses at the five strategic distributing points, and we make daily calls on every jobbing house in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. This ensures every product we handle being kept prominently before the wholesale trade, in a wholly effective way that no other house can offer.

Write us advising what you have to ship. We know we can help you.

Arrival of Eggs Exceeds the Demand

Disposal of Surplus Stock a Problem—Prices Easier—Further Reductions Looked for if Supplies Continue—Reduction in Provisions in Montreal—Butter Continues Steady With Light Arrivals—Cheese Market Firm

The Canadian movement of hogs during the past week has been normal and prices have ruled steady. The United States markets continue unsettled, with an evident determination on the part of the packing interests to bring about a lower level for live hogs and with farmers controlling the hog movement to hold prices. A year ago hogs sold at $11.00 in Chicago, while to-day they are $6.80, so that quite a substantial reduction has been made, but whether it will be increased remains to be seen.

Trade in pork products has been noticeably dull since the opening of the Lenten season, but with the approach of Easter dealers are looking forward to a good spring trade. Export business in provisions has been satisfactory of late and one packing firm states that 70 per cent. of its output is going across the Atlantic. One dealer, in speaking of the market, said: "The Lenten season with the slackness that accompanies it, is drawing to a close; substantial reductions have been made in pork products over prices ruling last year and with the encouraging cables from the Old Country of late, and the new life that the close of Lent should put into the trade, I think that even with a moderate supply of hogs that prices should rule steady."

Fresh eggs are being offered freely and even with an excellent demand, there there are surplus supplies, the disposition of which is causing dealers some concern. One dealer in speaking of the situation, said: "I think Canadian dealers will be careful about laying up stocks of eggs, at least until prices go down to a level with the United States markets. While under ordinary conditions, a difference of three cents a dozen, the amount of the duty, could be allowed, with the prospects of free trade, it would be altogether unsafe to store eggs until prices are equal to those in the States."

Butter prices continue steady with no particular features, supplies are not heavy, while the demand is strong and prices are expected to rule firm until arrivals increase. Chicago is offering held stocks of butter at lower prices than are ruling here, but the quality of some shipments received was found to be very poor. It is not likely accordingly that any large quantities will be imported, as the demand at present is for the best grades only.

MONTREAL.

Provisions.—While the market shows a number of reductions in the price list, the feeling is one of optimism with the approach of the Easter trade. Every season brings its business and while Lent is not a good season for the meat trade, at its close business takes on a new lease of life and the dealers will soon be experiencing it. The weakness in pure and compound lard and the reduction of fifty cents in the several lines of pork bring the price down to a still lower figure, but it was not altogether unexpected as the season has not been conducive to heavy business and for some time now has been rather dull. At any rate the feeling is much improved on account of the approach of Easter and the grocer should not overlook what is his due in this regard.

Provisions.—The situation in provisions shows little variation this week with few price changes. Trade is quiet although it might be considered fair for the Lenten season. Some firms are quoting pure lard at figures slightly below present quotations, but it is generally believed that lard has reached the bottom. Prices must be quite satisfactory to retailers as lard in pails quoted at 16½ a year ago is now 12½, long clear which was 14½ a year ago at 11½, while most other lines have had quite a substantial reduction in the year. Although the arrival of hogs during the past week has not been overly large, live hog prices have again been shaded 10 per cent. The provision market seems to be quite steady.

Butter.—The butter market rules steady with most firms quoting dairy at an advance of 1 cent. over last week's prices. Supplies, especially first grade are not heavy. There is a good demand for best quality, some firms reporting that a large part of their business is being done in creamery. The market is expected to rule steady for a time.

Eggs.—Egg prices are easier again this week, with new laids quoted at 18 to 19 cents. Arrivals continue large and the demand at this time excellent, but not large enough to use up all supplies. Easter is expected to use up a quantity of the surplus stocks, but if supplies keep up, prices will no doubt have to go lower.

Look for Higher Summer Sugar Market

Toronto Sugar Market Experts Say Would Not be Surprised to See Staple Go Higher Before End of Summer—Think Speculator in Control—Large Demand Has Depleted Refined Stores.

Toronto, March 30.—Although three advances in the price of sugar have been announced but recently, it would seem from a conversation The Grocer had yesterday with a dealer that further increases were almost now in process of formation.

"The sugar market," said he, "is peculiar. At the moment holders in London, England, are inclined to take profits, and in consequence the market has eased off a little but there is an underlying element of strength about the situation in New York City that is talking right out loud to some people here."

Think Speculator Controls.

"Of course it's difficult, and almost impossible to forecast a sugar market, with any degree of accuracy, but there are a number of men in this city—men usually supposed to be in closest touch with the market—who believe the speculator has now secured control of the situation and so can hold on till the preserving season if necessary. By that I mean that they think he can hold his stocks and make the refiner come to him. That means also that the refiner would have to meet the speculator's price, and the ultimate result would seem to be higher price for the refined product. That is what they argue. Nearly all of these men are more than half expecting an advance or two, and a high market right through the summer."

"Still there is a deal of conjecture about all this. If there should come a rapid unloading of European stocks, or if the Cuban and other cane crops should bulk larger during the next month or two, a falling market might be expected. Again if the shortage in the Cuban crop becomes more pronounced or if the Old World crop should be held by the speculators, you would have a market with advancing tendencies. At present no man can plumb the conditions that dominate the situation.

No Sugar Shortage.

Questioned as to the possibility of there being a shortage of supplies at the mills owing to the annual cleaning out of the canals in April, this dealer thought there was no cause to worry.

"The country is overstocked," he added. "Never in the history of the industry, has there been such an outrush of sugar to the retailer as has been the case during the first part of this year. As a matter of fact nearly double the amount has gone out to them. That is one of the circumstances setting this season apart from the rest—the dealer has the sugar that usually is held in the sheds of the manufacturers. But there should be lots for the country, and no dearth of supplies."

GROWTH OF ARTICHOKE BUSINESS

Started in a very small way a few years ago, the artichoke business, from the neighborhood of San Francisco, has developed considerably, the eastern shipments of this delicacy now amounting to about three hundred cars a year, a large proportion of which are taken by the New York market.

State food officials of New York and Pennsylvania are proceeding against butchers and dealers for alleged violation of state food laws in selling sausage products alleged to contain cereal binders or fillers without being labeled as such. Dealers state that cereal sausage products are both wholesome and healthful and do not come under "adulterated" foods.

New Business in Flour is Not Large

Mills are Largely Confined to Delivery of Contracts—No New Features to Flour Market — Canadian Wheat Prices Show Little Change From Week Ago—Conditions for Growing Crop Have Been Favorable So Far—Cereals Steady With No New Features.

Little new business is being done in flour, as buyers, having plentiful stocks, and not expecting an upward movement, are doing little purchasing. While most mills are kept fairly busy on delivery of contracts, still, more business would be quite acceptable.

Prices are liable to remain steady while this lack of new business continues.

Wheat in Chicago on Monday dropped to the lowest point of the year. This is said to have been caused by liberal receipts, large world's shipments, and slow cash demand. Conditions for bearish tendencies have been favorable so far. Last year at this time the wires were busy with reports of damage from alternate frosts and thaws, while this year complaints of this character are notably lacking. Canadian wheat markets are at about the same point as a week ago.

One dealer in speaking of wheat said: "I think wheat prices have about reached bottom. It is true that wheat supplies in the world are large but the conditions of the growing crop are bound to have their effect on future prices. So far conditions have been extremely favorable, hardly could they have been more so, and better reports or even a continuance of present conditions can hardly be looked for."

A despatch from Chicago says: "It is clear that there is enough wheat to go round and leave a good surplus for the world this year, and the question that is disturbing the trade is; How low will the price have to go to equalize the excess? The reductions already, under ordinary conditions would seem enough, and there are some good traders who believe that the excessive stocks have been discounted by the decline. But others whose opinions carry weight take a different view of the situation and expect still lower values. With a larger acreage of winter wheat than last year and a better start for the crop, the indications at the moment are for a better yield than that of a year ago."

CENTRAL DELIVERY.

Retail Merchants of Chatham May Adopt New Scheme.

Chatham, Ont., March 30.—It is likely that at a meeting of the retail merchants to be held in about two weeks' time arrangements will be made for instituting a central delivery system. At a recent gathering the details of the scheme were discussed, and warm approval expressed.

The present plans are for an hourly delivery to every section of the city. This would enable a merchant to deliver goods to all parts of the city simultaneously; whereas, at present, he can usually reach, at best, only two different sections in an hour. A regular delivery schedule would remove uncertainty on the customer's part as to when to expect his goods. Rush orders, too, at present involving a great deal of trouble, would be eliminated.

On the financial side a big saving is expected. Goods would be collected at hourly intervals, taken to the central station, and thence distributed within the hour, the city being mapped out into regular routes.

Veterinary Talks of Care of the Horse

Expert Reasons Why Good Horses are Scarce and Explains Why They Seem to be Steadily Growing Scarcer—Absolute Necessity of Study of Animal Individuality to Secure Best Results.

While talking about horses—ranging from the fleet thoroughbred to the slow-moving, ponderous, heavy draught, a veterinary surgeon dropped a few observations the other day that might be turned to good advantage by grocers throughout the country.

He was talking out of pure admiration of the noble equine, and gave the siftings of years of intimate observation and study, and, as he is a man of some repute in his chosen profession his words may be hearkened to with some respect

"The trouble with the horse industry in this country," he said, "lies in the contentment of the farmer in selling off his good mares and rounding out his stock again by buying in any old cheap animal from the city. He argues, does the farmer, that he gets a good price, and chuckles over it, but that is not the point. I met a man the other day who told me he had sold a team of mares for $600, and who was crowing about it. 'That's a mighty good price,' said he. I told him I did not agree with him, and said that he should, to make up for the loss in value of the colts of the future, have secured at least $1,000. And he was more than a little astonished.

"But still that's not all the trouble," continued the surgeon. "Nowadays it's a rare occurrence to meet a driver who really understands the animal he drives, and the consequence is that the present lot are being rapidly driven out. Where are they going to fill their places? It's getting harder all the time, and that is why a good merchant has to pay such fancy prices for his good delivery animals. But I'm afraid it is going to be worse before it's better."

Selection of Drivers.

"The time will come, of course, when the delivery man will be selected for his knowledge of the horse, and with that the farmer and breeder will have to be convinced of the error of his ways, so that he will refuse to sell his good stock mares for the first good price held up to his greedy gaze. It seems to me the grocer, the butcher, and the baker, should soon come to realize just what a horse is, and what it is entitled to in the way of treatment. I mean the smaller grocers and butchers and bakers, for the big concerns generally have capable men looking after their stables. A horse, as a matter of fact, is as sensitive in some ways as a human being and has almost as much individuality. Put a horse in a draughty stable and he will catch cold—is sure to; overfeed him, and he's going to get sick, keep it up, and he's going to become shortly unfit to use.

A cross between a thoroughbred and hackey makes the best delivery horse in my opinion, and he needs lots of pure air, a clean stable, just enough to eat, and only just enough work. The problem is, of course, for the man in charge to find out just how much of each of these he needs. Some animals, while big, require but a small amount of feed; other little ones need a whole lot. Some horses again will work hard on short rations, others want a large supply. It all simmers down to the individuality of the beast. That must be discovered and it takes a good deal of study. For, to get the most from the horse the whole scheme must be in harmony. You can put a horse in the most sanitary stable in the world—tiled walls and all the rest of it—but if there's a draught there the animal is not going to thrive.

Bad Feeding.

"Likewise you can have the fine stable without draughts, and if you don't give the proper amount and kind of feed, your horse is not going to prosper. I've known many drivers who would put a feed of oats before the animal in the morning; if he didn't clean it all up the man would add some bran to it at noon. Now probably that horse would keep nosing it about until the mess became sour and rancid, and, when it did finally clear it up, in desperation, sickness—indigestion was the inevitable result. Nine times out of ten the owner puts it down to overwork when really the lack of understanding on the part of the man who did the feeding was the cause. I've tended lots of horses in similar cases to that, and I've been called back often, in a day or so, because the proceedings were repeated. There's nothing much to be done then. It's a shame, nothing more nor less. The poor animals with their life of drudgery have about enough to contend with without bad care, through ignorance, being forced upon them.

Livery Care.

"That's the whole story," concluded the veterinary, "and that is how the long life of the livery drudge is explained. They are worked hard enough, goodness knows, but they are properly cared for. Men who understand them look after the stable and the result is the animals thrive. You can't imagine just how much a tired horse enjoys a soothing sponge bath, and just the right amount of feed and water, after coming in from a hard drive. Why it puts new life into them. That is why they are always ready when called upon."

The doctor ended up with a discourse on the relative, adaptability of breeds of horses for the farm. But the force of his argument had been lavished on the delivery drudge. Maybe if his suggestions were given a little thought the appearance of many a delivery outfit could be improved about fifty per cent., and the horse would be the better for it. And the customers would not fail to notice the change.

News for Busy Dealers from Here and There

Optimistic Report of Commission Which Investigated Fisheries of Manitoba—Trade in London Weak—Plea for Net Weight Legislation—Hudson's Bay Company Store for Calgary.

The Jersey Creme Company, a corporation incorporated under the laws of the state of Texas, U.S.A., has been licensed to carry on business in Ontario.

Addressing the New York Retail Grocers' Association at New York last week Commissioner Walsh of the Bureau of Weights and Measures urged the necessity of net weight legislation in order to protect the honest merchant against his dishonest competition.

Rendered helpless by lack of water the fire brigade of Calgary, Alberta, stood idly by while the grocery store of R. L. Jacques burned to the ground, some days ago.

It is reported from London, Ont., that sixty-two of the merchants of that city, embracing all lines of business almost, will endeavor to bring to the Forest city hundreds of western Ontario people during the first week in April. Special sales will be held and every visitor who purchases $20 worth of goods, will, it is said, be given return fare up to a distance of 65 miles. This is the first trade-in-London week yet held. Should it prove successful it may be held several times a year.

The Atlantic Fish Supply Company, Limited, has been incorporated at Toronto. The company purposes to carry on a wholesale and retail business in fish of all kinds and country produce, taking over the Atlantic Fish Supply Company. Ottawa will be the headquarters.

Thirty barrels of catsup or about ten tons were seized by health authorities in Boston recently on the ground that the stock contained no tomatoes and was unfit for use.

An optimistic view of the fish industry in Manitoba was given in the report presented by the commission appointed to inquire into the fisheries in that province. The finding goes to show that conditions in Manitoba are better than has been admitted. Although there have been many complaints that Lake Winnipeg and other Manitoba waters were being "overfished," the commission found that the yield of fish has kept up remarkably well. In their opinion there is no fear of the exhaustion of these fisheries in the immediate future. Evidence of the abundance of white fish in Lake Winnipeg is provided by the fact that although fishing operations are allowed by regulations to Aug. 15, each company had secured its allotted quantity before that date. The commissioners expressed the belief that the public would benefit if fish were sold direct to the retail dealers and recommended that the export of sturgeon should not be allowed; fish should not be handled in close season; fish firms should pay royalties on the fish they handle of ¼ cent per pound.

HINTS FOR GROCERS.

Attractive labels on cans, and good looking packages, help the sale of goods, and this should be noted by grocers in making purchases.

The good buyer in any business never purchases a quantity in excess of the needs of his store.

While people may buy in advance of the season, they cannot be persuaded to buy after the season is over.

If there is considerable traffic on the sidewalk across the street, it would be a paying investment to make it convenient for people to cross over.

Give the clerk a chance to express his opinions in regard to the purchase of goods. He can generally give you a good idea about the articles that sell best.

If your store sign stands flat against the front of the store, it will scarcely be visible to a person coming from either direction.

A grocery merchant or clerk should always find plenty to do. There is always a counter or shelf display that could be improved in appearance.

Teach the clerk from the first to be tidy, keeping goods nicely piled up, the counter well dusted, and the floor clean.

Never neglect a customer; they are more important than window dressing or floor sweeping.

Florida Tomatoes are Selling Well

Large Arrivals With Good Demand—California Orange Crop Estimated at Fifty Thousand Cars, With Thirty-Seven Thousand Yet to be Marketed—Chance That Prices May Break Under Deliveries—Good Lemons Arriving.

Unless the shipments of California oranges are curtailed and regulated, as growers and packers in that state have been advised, a break in the market can be expected with the large crop. Estimates from southern California run up to 50,000 carloads, of which, up to March 13th, there had been shipped but 13,205, leaving approximately 37,000 cars to be marketed. That amount of fruit can be moved between now and August 1st, it is said, only by making average shipments of not less than 260 cars daily. The necessary average has increased during the past two weeks because heavy rains have retarded picking, and in order to catch up, growers are doing their utmost to increase shipments now. There is a splendid demand on Canadian markets for oranges as the quality is good.

The quality of the Florida celery arriving this season has been good and demand has kept steady. It is noticeable that the chief demand is for the larger sizes, namely 4's and 6's, with shipments running mostly into the latter. Tomatoes are active, reasonable prices creating a good demand. The quality is good. Trouble is being experienced in shipments from Florida on account of lack of transportation, but there are large stocks in the warehouses there and prices are expected to continue reasonable.

Lemon prices are steady with arrivals of good quality. Dealers consider this a good season for the sale of lemons.

MONTREAL.

Green Fruits.—There is a new activity among the wholesale fruitmen with the advent of open weather and open doors. Oranges are slightly higher and a good trade is reported. Strawberries are beginning to cut quite a swath in the market, although the opening price has not yet been left far behind. There is an increased demand for grape fruit, the volume of business in this particular line being quite appreciable. Apples are high in price and short in supply. On the whole business is quite satisfactory, although the opening of spring has been somewhat delayed.

Vegetables.—The local market is well supplied with Florida celery, the condition bordering on an over supply. With the price considerably below the California variety, the demand has increased and the quantity on hand will likely find new consumers. Asparagus from Louisiana is one of the new vegetables and is finding a ready market. New butter beans in hampers are also welcome additions to the winter stock. Tomatoes are plentiful this week and it is not unlikely that the price may ease off a little under the new supply. In the other lines there is a good demand with the new spring trade already asserting itself. It is thought that tomatoes may drop to $2.50 before the week is over.

TORONTO.

Fruits.—Tomatoes occupy a prominent position on the fruit market this week, through large shipments being received from Florida. These are going out freely at $2.75 to $3 per case, a further reduction in price from last week. Apples in barrels are reported not plentiful with prices steady, while apples in boxes are more abundant. Cocoanuts are beginning to take on some life and are quoted at $5 per 100. Navels are steady at present quotations but the crop is large and the future market uncertain. Lemons are arriving in good condition and are steady at present figures. Grapes have almost disappeared from the local market, as have also marmalade oranges, in which most dealers report a fairly satisfactory season.

Vegetables.—Shipments of Florida celery are not so large, the demand for this line having slackened somewhat. Dealers report that the quality has kept up well. Considerable cabbage is being offered at $1.25 per barrel and in ½ ton lots at $18 per ton. Shipments of Ontario potatoes have been larger since the milder weather set in, a continuance of which would mean lower prices, but one dealer said that with the scarcity in the west and with higher prices on other markets, he did not expect prices to break much this spring.

Fish Prices Fall at Some Centres

Lenten Season Drawing to a Close—Dealers Trying to Reduce Stocks—Demand is Rather Quiet—Finnan Haddie and Lobsters Scarce in Nova Scotia—Larger Catches of Halibut in British Columbia.

With the Lenten season on the wane the price of fish shows a reduction, which when compared with the opening quotations is rather marked at some centres. It is given out by one house that prices have been lowered below cost to reduce stocks before the close of Lent which is now just two weeks away. Demand is reported rather quiet, the weather having the effect expected. There is, however, a fairly good trade still passing and the quantity of frozen fish still in store is said to be fairly large. This is held in cold storage and is of fine quality, in fact just as good as any that has so far been sent out.

The trade in oysters is hanging on and considerable demand is felt. Lobsters are, however, decidedly scarce, prominent men in the fish business stating that they are not especially eager to quote prices on this luxury.

QUEBEC.

Montreal.—Fish prices have slumped quite generally during the past week. The natural break in the weather is one of the reasons, and another is the fact that the stocks still on hand are heavier than the companies care to see with Easter only two weeks away. The reduction in prices has been rather sweeping and it is claimed by some that in a number of cases they are below the actual cost.

NOVA SCOTIA.

Halifax.—Good finnan haddies are scarce, and the market is bare of lobsters and smelts. There is no material improvement. Bad weather continues along the coast and the fishermen are prevented from reaching the banks. Lobsters were never so scarce before, during the open season. No lobsters are coming on the local market, and as a result there is a demand for the canned article, the sales being heavier than for a long time. The falling off in the catch in Nova Scotia waters has caused a rapid advance in prices in the American markets.

Cod and haddock are in fairly good supply, and there is some improvement in the receipts of fresh halibut, another cargo having been obtained from an American banker. Smoked and salt fish are in good demand, the latter, with the exception of herring, being scarce. Few salt mackerel are offering and those on the market are very small.

In consequence of the scarcity the dealers are not making any heavy shipments to upper Canadian points.

ONTARIO.

Toronto.—The trade in fish is rather slow, being affected somewhat by weather conditions. The trade are also waiting for fresh stocks to come in, as about the only kind being offered at the present are haddock and halibut, the latter enjoying a good trade at 10c per lb. Dealers are well satisfied with the season's trade and with new arrivals the business to take on activity again. Trade in oysters is also dull, as may be expected at this season, but the quality is keeping up well. The feeling seems to be that the requirements for the Lenten trade were judged pretty accurately on the local market.

BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Vancouver.—Better catches of halibut are being brought in, the Manhattan having 160,000 pounds, after being out fourteen days. During the winter, halibut were scarce. Little is known of this food fish, but it is evident that it is not in its accustomed place for some months of the year. The price is down again to five cents per pound.

Spring salmon have started in, and as large as 48 pounders have been caught. This is one of the nice fresh varieties.

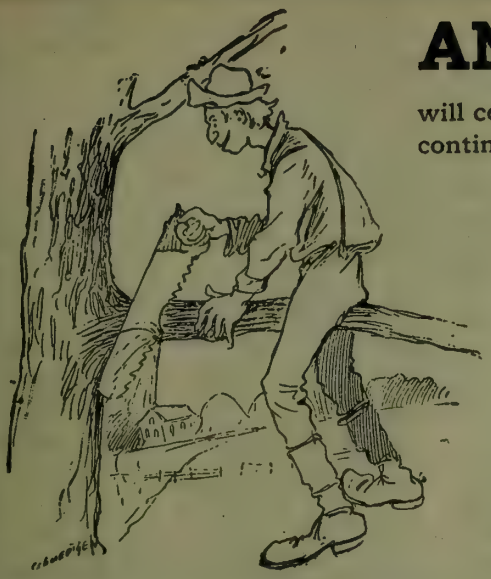
Sturgeon are also being caught in the Fraser river. This fish is mostly shipped to the large eastern cities where there is a good demand at excellent prices.

Although this is supposed to be the close season for herring, complaint is made that Japanese at Nanaimo are catching large quantities, acting under a license which allows them to catch for bait purposes only. The fish now are spawning. Action is being taken to stop the practice.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

St. John.—The fish market shows little or no change since last report. There is a good supply of all the seasonable lines and prices are about the same.

Lobsters have been selling in Portland, Me., and Boston, for 55 cents per pound.



Because a large part of the sardine pack of 1910 was questioned by the Pure Food inspectors, a bill has been introduced into the Maine legislature, providing that every packer of sardines shall be required to take out a license, and his manufactures closely inspected. This would seem to be a step in the right direction. The sardine plants along the Maine and New Brunswick coast are being put in readiness for the early April opening.

BUY ONTARIO SUGAR BEETS.

Michigan Sugar Factories Secure More Than Fifty Thousand Tons Last Year.

The sugar factories of Michigan send their representatives here to "write sugar beets" with the Ontario farmer for their factories. During the season of 1910 there were shipped to the Michigan factories from Ontario 57,302 tons, for which the farmer received $257,855. Taking the quantity consumed by the three Canadian factories, 77,829 tons, plus the shipments to Michigan, 57,302 tons, give a total production of 135,131 tons of sugar beets as the Canadian crop for the year 1910.

For the year ended March 31, 1910, the sugar imports of Canada amounted to 497,781,481 pounds, while the product of the home factories was estimated at about 25,000,000 pounds.

Expect Advent of Uniformed Man Driver

Manager of London Grocery Store Expresses Himself in Favor of Innovation—Arguments of Grocers Who Prefer Men to Boys as Drivers—The Care of Outfits and Cost of Carelessness.

(Staff Correspondence.)

London, Ont., March 30.—With the spread of the practice of providing uniforms for messengers and drivers in different branches of trade, it would seem that the grocers will be next to adopt it. The men who drive the wagons of one manufacturing concern in London wear a neat grey uniform with the name in gilt lettering on the collar; a shoe repair company on Richmond street supplies its delivery men with uniforms, and the bank messengers of course, have long worn the insignia of office. ...

The manager of one of London's largest grocery stores this week expressed himself as in favor of the adoption of the plan by the grocers, and the belief that its introduction by one would mean its adoption by practically all. His idea is that the drivers are the firms' representatives on street and at the back door, and that it pays to make a good impression. Furthermore, it would make the men think more of their work.

Men as Drivers.

In this connection, it is interesting to note that all grocery firms of importance in London employ men as drivers, and not boys. If a driver is laid off through illness or some other cause, it is generally a clerk who takes his place temporarily.

The reasons given for this plan are manifold, The Grocer found on enquiry. Probably the one most generally advanced is that a man will save the additional pay that he draws in taking care of horseflesh. The carelessness and rough driving of the butcher boy is almost proverbial, and that of some of his brothers on the grocery rig is often as bad. In a city of car tracks and curbstones carelessness will often cause damage to rigs that would pay a man's wages.

These wages, by the way, are about $10 to $15 in London—quite as high, probably, as any other form of unskilled labor commands. The situation appears to be that they regard their work as permanent and to be properly attended to, while a boy generally leaves school to drive a rig for the purpose of earning a little ready money. He is anything but a fixture, and may have to be replaced at any time by a new boy who will have to learn his routes and methods all over again.

In the village or small town, the grocer's stable is generally back of his residence, and the "boss" himself is more than likely to attend to his horses at night, and on Sundays and holidays. In the city, it is not often that a grocer can secure stable quarters at his house, and a stable man will do the work for him in another part of the town.

Cost of Carelessness.

"I had a valuable horse ruined in a street car collision, with a boy as driver," said a London grocer, who now has three or more men on his rigs. "It was of no further use to me, and the price I paid for another horse would have covered a man's wages for a long time."

"We have three drivers—all men," said another grocer, "and they save in horses and wagons the extra cost over boys' wages."

It seems likely that the lady of the house would more readily give an order or pay a bill to an adult driver, but this feature hardly counts in London, because canvassing for orders is the exception rather than the rule.

"We find that orders which have been canvassed are not too readily paid," explained a grocer. "Instead of settling a bill, such people order more goods. We don't do it at all."

With the added item of greater care of goods in transit from store to customer, the case appears strong for the "man driver."

GROWING OF BROOM CORN.

Manufacturer Says Nights in Canada are Too Cold.

In reference to an article on the growing of broom corn which appeared in a recent issue of The Canadian Grocer, a broom manufacturer writes as follows:—

"The writer has noticed that for the past thirty years or more whenever broom corn goes to an abnormally high price an attempt is made to grow it here.

"Unfortunately the nights are too cold for good results and it appears almost impossible to secure a fine green growth of broom corn which is the only real valuable brush.

"To-day prices are running from $50 to $120 a ton in the far west, say an average of $100, and this will net the farmer $33 per acre, which, while a fair return does not appear to be as good, from the profit point of view, as on produce now raised here."

MISSING DISCOUNTS.

Grocer Tells of His Losses on a Series of Articles.

"It is remarkable how much a man can save or lose through attention or neglect of the little things in business," remarked a grocer the other day in the course of a conversation on discounts, a series of articles about which appeared on The Grocer some time ago.

"Why," he continued, "when I commenced to figure out this question of discounts I found that my loss was greater than I had at first supposed. All along I had been paying no attention to it, regarding 1, 2, or 3 per cent. as amounts too small to be bothered with, but when a person figures it up, it certainly makes a difference in profits. A glance over last month's invoices for instance shows me that I bought $170 worth of sugar. The discount on that would have been $1.70 for payment in ten days, or 20 days ahead of the usual month. That amount would be received for $170 for 20 days which means 18 per cent. per annum while I am only getting 3 per cent. in the bank."

"Do you handle many cakes and biscuits?" was asked. "There is a 3 per cent. discount on them."

"Yes, I sell quite a large quantity of plain and fancy biscuits," was the reply. "During the month of December I got in about $100 worth. The discount on these would have amounted to $3.00. I have been finding out that a few such items saved, would go a long way toward paying the rent. I have been looking over my back invoices and find I have been letting a lot of money in discounts slip through my fingers. There is no use crying over spilt milk but I am certainly going to look carefully after this in the future. Let me show you."

"I have prepared a book," he continued, "so that I will be sure not to miss any of these discounts. In that book I enter each invoice on which there may be a saving, with the name of the company and the time it comes due. I have a page for each month so that besides my invoice book, I may check up each month and see if I have taken all discounts that were possible."

TRADE NOTES.

A "Sick and Dividing Tea Company" has been formed in Lincolnshire, Eng., which sells tea at 2s. per pound, carriage free everywhere, and offers to set aside 75 per cent. of its net profits to be handed over to a committee to distribute in sick pay and for funeral expenses among the company's customers. It is also proposed to pay 10s. a week during sickness, to be reduced to 5s. per week after a period. Combined with the sale of tea there is a sort of sick club, by which persons can get medical attendance in return for a weekly payment of 1d. and this branch of the company appears to be open to everyone between 16 and 70 years who chooses to enter and to pay a slightly higher weekly payment without buying any tea.

The value of the cod fisheries to the Dominion of Canada is now nearly $4,000,000 annually. Since 1869 the cod has yielded Canada an income of $150,000,000, leading salmon, lobsters and all other species of fish. Up to the present the cod has been dried and delivered to the consumer in that condition, but recent experiments in the canning of this fish have proved most encouraging. It is pointed out that when taken from the water and at once prepared for the table, it has a delicacy far superior in appetizing appearance and flavor to the dry cod and that the canned product in appearance of whiteness and delicacy of flavor, comes very near the fresh cod. If the canning process proves successful, the product will likely cut down the consumption of the dried article a great deal.

ORIGIN OF RAISINS.

The raisins which the grocer sells are simply dried grapes, and, although there are hundreds of varieties of table and wine grapes, there are only a few suitable for raisins, as only the fleshy varities which develop abundant saccharine matter being used. Raisins contain more sugar and less acid than fresh grapes.

Tea and Coffee Trade Symptoms on Pacific Coast

Vancouver, B.C., March 30.—Interesting phases of the tea and coffee trade were remarked upon by the manager of a local wholesale tea and coffee firm. He points out that while the price of tea has been steadily advancing for many months, during the past three months it has advanced more sharply than at any time during the past three years, and the present prospects point for higher prices for some years to come. The reasons given are that the consumption is larger while the production is smaller. In Ceylon alone, 75,000 acres have been taken out of tea production and given over to the growth of rubber, which shows large profits where tea paid poorly.

"The price of coffee three months ago," he said, "also reached a figure one hundred per cent. higher than it was two years before, though the past few weeks have shown a little easing in the market. This seems to be the result of action taken by the government of Brazil acting in conjunction with what is known as the valorization interests.

"About three years ago when green coffee was selling in Brazil as low as seven cents a pound and the business was in a depressed state, the Brazilian Government negotiated a loan of $75,000,000 with the Rothschilds, Morgan and some of the leading financial houses, and with this they arranged a campaign to keep up the price of coffee. They purchased a surplus as a reserve, and the government limiting the export of coffee to 9,000,000 bags per year, and anything exported over that amount had to pay twenty per cent. export duty. They also stopped the planting of coffee trees in Brazil, and as a result of this policy coffee rose to a very high price. Of late, however, the valorization interests announced that they will place 1,200,000 bags on the market in two sales, their policy being to keep the market as even as possible. This has resulted in a temporary easing in prices, and the best advised people consider that this is a good time to get in to purchase supplies."

M. Jivia, grocer, Hosmer, B.C., has sold out.

Brittle & Robbins will open a general store at Fort George B.C.

Wheeler & Evans, general merchants, Enderby, B.C., have been succeeded by Evans & Son.

H. L. Gaetz, general merchant, Red Deer, Alta., is opening a branch at Rocky Mountain House.

Grocer's Encyclopedia—The Prune

Some Interesting Facts About Food Fruit That Has Become Famous as Diet in the Boarding House—Countries Where Grown—Manner of Curing and Packing.

"For men may come and men may go but prunes go on forever."

When the poet Tennyson, penned those beautiful immortal lines about the brook he little dreamed that one day they would be warped to satisfy the craving fancy of the boarding house wit. But so it has become. The phrase quoted above is well-worn by the patrons of the boarding house all over the North American continent, and will go down into history, probably as of sufficient popularity to be considered favorably with the countless puns on "hash" that have brightened many an otherwise dull "eating house" table since further back than goes the memory of the present generation.

Still, despite all, the sales of the prune increase, and, as it is recognized generally as a superior food fruit, there seems to be no reason why the demand should not steadily increase. It can hardly be said that this year the large consumption can be attributed to cheapness for prices are extremely high. But trade has kept at a high level, demonstrating that the prune has a place of its own. It is considered very nutritous, mellow and slightly laxative. Stewed in water it is supposed to be a good remedy for costiveness and feverishness. The fact that it is an excellent food, and possesses certain medicinal value as well, should be of some use to the grocer.

What Prune is.

The prune is nothing more than a plum, dried. The word itself is derived from the Latin Prunum, which signifies plum. To be more specific the word is defined as relating to the fleshy varieties of the common plum of firm texture which are easily dried whole, either in the sun or by artificial heat, without fermenting at the pit. It is prepared in many parts of the world (France, Spain, Italy, Servia, Portugal and other European countries all going in for its treating), but the prune that is generally used in this country comes from the States, California and Oregon, where the production seems to steadily grow larger.

The California prune is said to contain a much smaller proportion of stone and skin than the European variety, while the meat and saccharin matter is much greater. It also is said to be superior in flavor and to keep better and longer without sugaring. The French prune is sometimes imported to this country, but this year the production in that country, as in other parts of the world, has been but small, so that outside supplies had to be drawn upon to supply the home demand.

The Curing of It.

In preparing the fresh-gathered, ripe, and thick skinned plum is first dried in the sun until soft, sometimes spread on hurdles, and then spends about twenty-four hours in a slow brick oven. After cooling, it is put in a warmer oven, and again a third or fourth time, until sufficiently dried. Great care has to be exercised that the skin be not broken, and that the fruit is not packed until all surplus moisture has entirely disappeared; if packed while damp it will mould in the package. A skilled packer can tell by the sense of touch just when the fruit is fit for packing and when it is not.

In Servia and other parts of Europe very primitive methods are still employed in curing. In Provence the freshly gathered fruit is plunged into pots of boiling water, where it remains until the water again arrives at boiling point. It is then removed from the broilers, placed in baskets and gently shaken until cool, when it is placed on long trays and exposed to the heat of the sun to complete the desiccation. The fruit loses about 60 per cent. in weight, it is said, during the process. The prune is one of the chief resources of Servia and large quantities have been exported from that country into France, so the story goes, and re-exported as French at considerably higher prices.

The French prune industry has been declining of late years, America having proved a formidable competitor. The system of drying fruit in America has the best results and in some parts of France American methods are being adopted.

In this country prunes are packed in 25 and 50-lb. boxes. They are ranged in several sizes. The large ones, which have the smallest stones, being the dearest. This year, there is a noticeable scarcity of prunes, particularly in the smaller sizes, and prices have risen to a new high level.

The Hudson's Bay Company will build, it is said, a store in Calgary, Alberta, to cost a million and a half dollars.

In 1892, teas from India and Ceylon formed only 3 per cent. of America's imports, while in 1910, they comprised 30 per cent., a ten-fold increase. Or in figures: in 1892, the Ceylon and India tea brought into America was but 3,098,000 pounds, while in 1910 it was 43,655,000 pounds. The total importations were 118,179,000 pounds.

SODA-CRYSTALS (WASHING SODA)

Foreign Soda Crystals—and some of English manufacture—are being extensively offered for sale in this country which are grossly adulterated with Glauber-Salts (Sulphate of Soda), a cheap product which is not only entirely useless for washing purposes, but is even likely to injure the fabrics with which it comes in contact. The Adulterated Soda-Crystals, although nominally lower in price than BRUNNER MOND'S PURE SODA CRYSTALS, are in reality much dearer owing to the large quantity of useless and injurious matter which they contain.

"I have covered three-quarters of the grocers here and found all but one taking The Canadian Grocer, and I am sending through his order."

This is an extract from a letter from one of our subscription salesmen who visited a Canadian city, last week, with a population of 20,000.

> "I am forwarding another list of subscribers from here (Port Arthur) and may say that The Grocer has now every grocer in the city but one, and he is too much interested in sporting events to read anything but the sport page of the newspapers."

This is an extract from a letter of another of our salesmen received the following day.

All of which goes to show the thoroughness of the canvass made by this paper; it illustrates, too, the ATTENTION, the INTEREST and the RECEPTION which The Grocer receives, because it is a BUSINESS paper for BUSINESS men—an actual money-maker.

Stop that Night Work!

The daylight hours should be sufficient in which to do your bookkeeping. And still, many nights each month you are chained to your chair and your desk, posting, totaling accounts, making out statements, doing any one of a dozen things with your books.

You want information about your business, yet you are going the long way around to get it. The short way is the one adopted by more than 70,000 merchants in all parts of the United States. These have found that by the use of The McCaskey Gravity Account Register System their posting and totaling are done at the time the sale is made. They have no statements to make or mail at the end of the month because each sale-slip is an itemized account of the goods purchased and each shows the total indebtedness to date.

The McCaskey System has been approved by expert auditors and accountants as the natural, logical and most scientific method of handling accounts, yet is so simple that

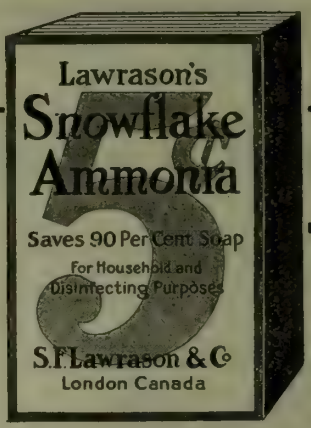
Only One Writing

THE McCASKEY SYSTEM

First and Still the Best

with it anyone can keep accurate records of goods bought and sold, merchandise on hand, cash on hand and in bank, accounts payable and any other that may be desired.

The McCaskey System cuts out useless bookkeeping, prevents forgetting to charge, prevents errors and disputes with customers over their accounts, acts as an automatic collector, is an automatic credit limit, preventing over-buying and over-selling, and protects the user against loss of insurance in case of fire.



You owe it to yourself to investigate the merits of the McCaskey proposition.

A letter or postal card will bring you information without any obligation on your side to purchase.

Or, tear out this advertisement, sign your name and address, when it reaches us we'll know you want information.

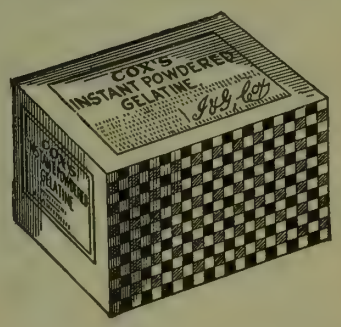
Folks Certainly DO Judge by Appearances

You remember the farmer's reply when the peevish grocer asked why he put his best looking apples at the top of the barrel: "Why, Henry, you tell me, please, why you brush that forelock down over your forehead---guess you've got a bald spot, Henry." Human nature is much the same the world over, friend.

If you display familiar trade-marked goods folks will judge the character of your general stock thereby. Quality merchandise is a weather-gauge that indicates the trend of your business alertness, your progressiveness. Folks DO judge by appearances---please remember that!

Let Them See THESE on Your Shelves

COCO FRUITINE



Marseilles, France, produces it through the skillful work of the original makers. Best known abroad because most largely used by economical folks in foreign countries, for cooking and pastry. A pure extract of the cocoanut.

LA CALICE

Pure Castile

Made also in Marseilles and made pure from beginning to end. The successors of Messrs. D. Leca & Co. follow in the footsteps of their predecessors, without deviating a hair's breadth from that business policy that has raised La Calice Castile Soap to the highest pinnacle of quality.

Cox's Gelatine gives a "high-grade appearance" to the general stock of any grocer's store. It is, and always has been, an authoritative standard for Quality. Pure, quick, sure — the housewives' stand-by! As staple as sugar or salt!

Biscuit business is booming for the dealer who is pushing McCormick's "Maple Leaf" and "Lemon Cream" Biscuits.

The advertising and the quality of the goods have created a demand greater than we hoped for and it has taken some hustling on our part to satisfy everybody. But now that we have caught up, we invite every dealer to "come in" and make new friends and steady customers by putting in a supply of each kind.

These two tempting, fairy-like sandwiches have a charm wholly their own, and are so delicately fragile and delicious in flavor that they are fast taking the place of heavy desserts.

REAL TRUE CREAM AT LAST

Mr. A McGill, the Chief Analyst to the Inland Revenue Department of Canada, wrote in Bulletin 144, as far back as under date 3rd June, 1908:—"The word 'CREAM' is largely used to designate condensed milk. This is incorrect and SHOULD BE MADE ILLEGAL. As a matter of fact, these so-called 'creams' are not any richer in milk fat than sugared condensed milks, and many of them are distinctly poorer. Among the samples examined ONLY ONE (No. 25628 which contains 28.20 per cent. of fat) IS ENTITLED TO BE CALLED CREAM."

This one sample was prepared by FUSSELL & CO., Ltd., LONDON AND NORWAY.

FUSSELL'S GOLDEN BUTTERFLY BRAND CREAM

as REAL CREAM and contains from 25 to 30 per cent. milk fat. Condensed milks—the so-called "Evaporated Creams"—contain about 8 per cent. only.

THE AVERAGE PERSON

Is not a good judge of groceries and knows it.

¶ Therefore, the particular buyer looks for certain "guide posts" to indicate the store upon which he can depend for quality when buying groceries.

¶ He may not know how to select good tea or coffee in bulk, for instance, but he knows he gets value when he buys Heinz Pickles; and is likely to be favorably influenced towards the grocer who sells them and other trade-marked goods of equal standing.

¶ He may not be able to argue for or against Benzoate of Soda, but he knows he prefers to take no chances with drugs in his food, and is likely to read the label on the kind of Ketchup the grocer recommends.

COFFEE MILLS

The pedestal mill illustrated here is the latest and newest design in coffee mills of this description, owing to the fact that it is constructed along the most advanced principle that has yet come into use.

The grinders both run at different speeds, as will be seen by the construction of the mill.

It is an acknowledged fact that: Granulating can be done more efficiently at high speed, while pulverizing can be done with less heating of the coffee at a much lower speed. These are indisputable facts.

Let the judgment of experts guide you, for they all decide unanimously in favor of this type of mill, which is Patent Applied For, and manufactured exclusively by us. Price—$150.00.

Made also for counter use. Price $135 00.

Signs of Unrest in Provision Market

Pork Packer Reveals Some of the Worries of Manufacturers in Connection With the Possibility of Changing Markets—How Maker Buys on Thirty-day Hope of British Market—Peculiarity of Cuts Necessary to Success With English Public—Cost of Production Compared With United States—Lard and Egg Prices.

"The Canadian farmer would have been wise had he stuck to the raising of hogs through the slump period three years ago when the price of the marketable pig was low, and, likewise, he will be exhibiting wisdom if he keeps persistently at it in all the days to come," declared a pork packer the other day in discussing market conditions with The Canadian Grocer.

"The days of that depression were but few," he continued, "and yet so great was the disgust throughout the country that the breeders quit in great numbers. Those who kept at the work proved their wisdom for the price of the hog shot upward like an aeroplane because of the scarcity of supplies. The quotations have since never descended to the levels of those days, and in my opinion they never will again. I don't believe we ever will see the five cent hog on the market."

The belief of this Canadian packer, considered in the light of the proposed Reciprocity agreement will no doubt be of interest to the Canadian farmer; it should also be a matter of thought to Canadian dealers. Carried further it should be a subject of importance to Canadian consumers. The Grocer is not discussing in this connection either the merits or demerits of the suggested tariff arrangement, but its probable effects on British and home markets in the event of its becoming law must be considered as of importance on future Canadian market conditions.

He is undoubtedly of the opinion that Reciprocity will work hardship to the Canadian export trade in that it will tend towards lowering the standard of pork products marketed in England. If his diagnosis is correct then the passing of the agreement, might be of some benefit to Canadian dealers, because, if the standard of the exported goods from this country is to be taken as lower in Europe, then there should not be quite so much of it sent across the Atlantic. Hence more of this export stock would be sold in Canada, meaning, in all probability a better-supplied market. Of course the packer argues that the United States jobbers may easily absorb the surplus of stocks in this country. These things the Canadian dealer can take into consideration.

Taking Chances.

"As a general rule," said the packer, "the price of live hogs in this country is controlled by the price of the manufactured product in Britain, and there are underlying facts in connection with that rule that force the buyer here to be very careful in his purchasing of raw material. Lots and lots of times we have found ourselves facing a lower market in England with higher-priced goods in stock. Supposing, for instance, we look at the present prices quoted in cables from the Old Land, for pork products, and consider them fair. We go out, on the strength of them alone, and purchase hogs. On killing day we decide on the English "cuts" we are going to send across the pond, and proceed to the manufacture. It takes about twenty days to get these to the sea-board, and about ten more to set them down in the British centres. By the time they are set down the ruling prices there may have eased off considerably and we have marketed high-priced goods at a loss. That is the position and as you can see it's not all sunshine and roses. It is sunshine and roses only when the British market holds steady or advances from the quotations we had to work on a month previous when we put in our supplies.

The English "Cuts.

"There is one fact in connection with export goods that might be of interest to the dealer, and to the public for that matter. It is this: The cuts sold in Britain and those marketed here are not the same. I'm not talking of quality; but the sturdy inhabitants of "The right little, tight little island," likes to buy his goods in different shape to the Canadian; they are altogether different, hams, sides, shoulders and all. For that reason we have to decide on killing day whether we are going to market the resulting products in Britain or in Canada. If we decide for Britain and proceed with the manufacture, and the market drops, then we stand to lose; if we decide for Canada and the British market advances we also lose, for the Canadian cuts would not be accepted in England. In either event we would be loaded up with unmarketable goods viewed from the standpoint of 'best price.'

"Again," proceeded the packer, warming to his subject, "the standard of Canadian goods is higher in England than that of the United States. That is where the Reciprocity arrangement enters in. If the duty on hogs is taken off there will be no gainsaying the inevitable contention of the British consumer 'that he can not buy stuff made in Canada as Canadian grown, because the hog might have been shipped over from the Republic and only manufactured in the Dominion.' In consequence the standard will drop, and you know what happens to price when the standard of goods is lowered. So it's impossible for any man to forecast the market of the future, with all these circumstances in view.

Cost of Production.

"There is a lot of talk about Canadian packers paying less for the live hog and getting more for the product than does the packer of the United States. That is all rot! We are paying, now, $6.65 per hundred weight; in the United States the prices range from $6.25 to $6.75. You will notice the prices there are graded; here we have but one price. And here again enters another condition that will be of interest to the Canadian dealer. It is this: There is not in Canada the consuming population that there is in the United States. By that I do not altogether mean numbers, but the classes of the masses. The big packers of the Republic makes easily $1.50 per hog out of offal that we we have to put into fertilizer. We haven't got the Huns, Slavs and Polacks to buy the neck-bones, back-bones, livers, lungs, snouts, ears, tails and brains that our competitors there have. That is something to be thought of. And in addition our Canadian people will not eat the goods the American populace consider the very best; our people won't eat the heavy fat stuff, the Yankee gets; we don't want to see any fat at all, not a string of it. All that makes it more expensive for the packer of this country to do business. An agent of a representative United States concern gave me some ham and bacon which he considered the best that could be produced in the United States, and I had difficulty in selling it for 12 cents a pound, when I was selling our own goods for 20 and 22. That's all on account of the standard our people have set for themselves. They will not eat poor, fatty goods."

The Available Supply.

In regard to the available supplies of hogs, this packer could only say there seemed to be more hogs in the country now than has been the case since the period of depression, mentioned earlier; but he thought there were not as many as before that drop came. But he concluded philosophically, "it always takes years to get over a depletion of stock." A glance at the table given below will give the dealer an idea of the movement of hogs during the past year.

Lower Egg Market.

He felt sure there was going to be a reduction in the price of eggs, and generally was pessimistic as to the future of this market.

He cited statistics recently supplied by Mr. Pepper, one of the tariff experts of the United States, to show how large was the business of the shipping of eggs, from that country into this, and how small that from Canada into the United States. This even with the duty of three cents a dozen. He foresaw the possibility of the packers of Canada abandoning the storage of eggs that usually is done in April and May, and depending upon the Chicago cold storage houses for steady supplies. In previous years the duty imposed on eggs from the United States was the only thing standing between the cold-storage man in this country and heavy loss, when there came a break in the market for the product. Even as it was the Chicago men had flooded this market with eggs at a price that spelled loss in big bold letters, on this side of the line.

A Busy Summer.

Still as to the general provision market he looked forward to a busy sum-

How Some Boosted the Provision Trade

Methods of Montreal Dealer Whose Customers Visit Store Infrequently and Who Depend Mainly on the Telephone — The Care That Must be Exercised by Merchants Under Eyes of Purchasers—Selling Power of Clerk — Economies That Bring Results.

From the investigations of The Grocer it is apparent that many merchants have adopted the policy of allowing the provision department to work up its own trade. They seem to have an idea that the mere presence of a stock of cold meats will serve the complete purpose, which is precisely why some grocers are losing their share of the provision business of their district to butchers who do take a measure of pride in it.

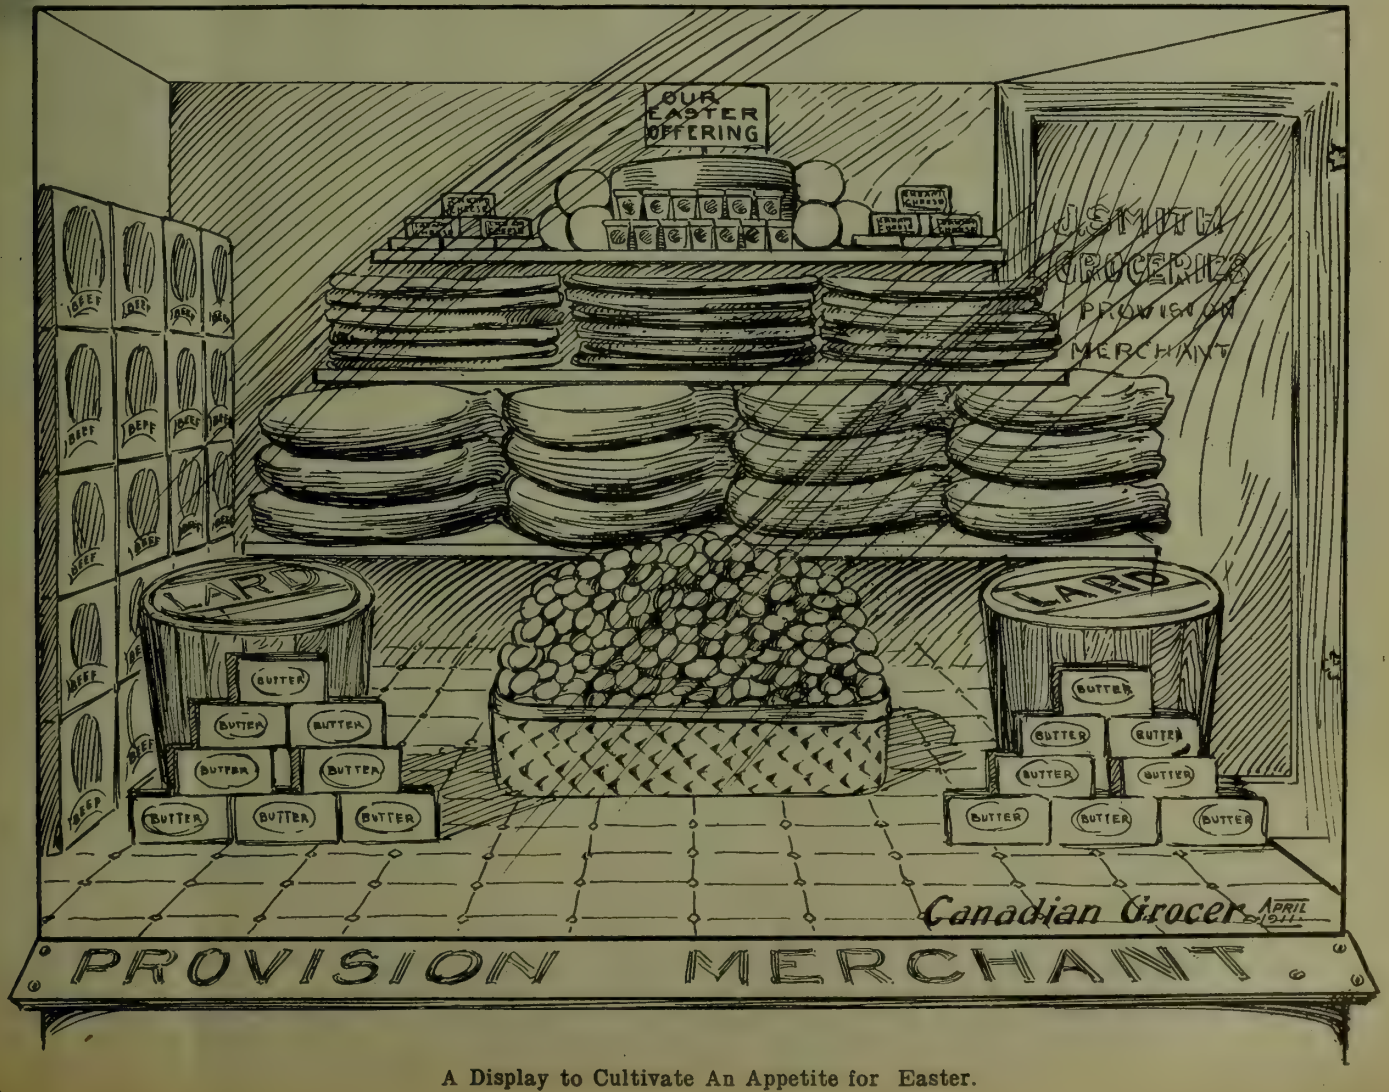
As in other branches of the grocery business it is the personal salesmanship of the man behind the counter that is going to count in the selling of his provisions. If he doesn't understand the stock himself, or if he lacks the "knack" to slice meats properly, then it is difficult to drum up a trade. Some dealers get over this by bringing in a man who DOES understand it and who has time to give to its development.

A Montrealer's Method.

The carrying of a dainty line of smoked and cooked meats is one of J. Johnston's simple methods of getting his share of the provision trade. His store on Prince Arthur Street, Montreal, finds among its customers a large number who depend a great deal on the telephone to send in their orders and they are infrequent visitors to the store. To a large extent therefore the "selling" of his stock is done by means of the telepnone. He suggests it merely. It is an idea in itself when the trade has advanced to the telephone stage.

Cooked roast pork, boiled hams and good bacon are necessary for the Easter trade, Mr. Johnston thinks, but especially the latter. And it is his opinion that for every sale of bacon, there should be one of eggs. One should suggest the other. He carries new tomatoes and other green vegetables to further appeal to the taste that is looking for something special for Easter.

Care is Needed.



But there are many grocers handling a line of provisions to whom the telephone is not the chief selling medium, and whose store is visited almost daily by customers who like to see things for themselves. That is where, as every grocer knows, care has to be exercised. The stock has to look clean, the slicing must be done nicely, and above all the goods must appear fresh always, or there is going to be trouble.

Usually the groceries are ordered first and the provisions last, so that this trait of watchfulness has fullest possible play. The customer will stand and watch the dealer do all his slicing and everything and unless it is done to her satisfaction, the provision section of his store has suffered even if no complaint be made. Probably next time she wants something in that line she will go somewhere else. That is why many merchants never trust an inexperienced clerk in the provision department.

Regular dealers, whose specialty, whole trade in fact, is based on provisions, have several ideas in connection with the selling of meat which they claim are the means of saving them money.

One Little Economy.

An illustration of this is in the slicing of sides of bacon. These provision dealers never slice it all. They will cut it down until about four or five inches is left—piece with a bone in it. It is not easy to slice this, and, when it is sliced it doesn't look good, because the pieces are so small. So they leave the piece intact, and try to sell it at cost price. If that is not possible, they finally do slice it up, but it is placed on a platter, with a price-card attached showing the price to be down to cost.

Hiring Help---Some Real Experiences

Improvement in Grocers' Assistants Only to be Brought About by Continual Effort on the Part of Individual Grocer—The Man Who Drove the Bus—Farmer Who Was Sure the Business Had Not Changed in Thirty Years—Trials and Tribulations in Other Cases.

By Henry Johnson, Jr.

I have been led to think that the greatly needed improvement in grocers' assistants must come about much as I have suggested how improvement in the giving of credit shall be accomplished—by continual, careful, persistent effort on the part of each individual grocer. As for present conditions—well, they could hardly be worse. There is no knowledge, no skill, no sense of loyalty or responsibility to be found anywhere ready to hand. Every bit of all this must be made by each of us out of and into the "help" we hire.

He Drove a Bus.

For instance, I advertise that I want: "an experienced delivery clerk." Next day I get two or three applications. After much winnowing, I get nearly desperate, for my need is great, and I decide that I'll take nearly anybody. Just as I begin to figure that way, along comes a young fellow of lumbering, uncertain, slovenly gait and asks if I have found a "man" yet for that "job." I note the cigarette smell, the shifty eye, the "tired-feeling" pose; yet, as I said, I'm sadly in need and I parley. I ask: "Have you ever delivered goods?" "No—not in a grocery store, but I've drove a bus." I feel like kicking the fool out but hold on to myself. "Then, as you must know, you'd have it all to learn. Are you willing to begin at the bottom and take the gradual advancement?" "What'r y' payin' ?" That finishes me. Not if I had to quit and shut up shou would I hire a galoot like that.

"My friend," I say; "it's very evident to me that you're not the man for this job."

Such a Simple Business.

Why do they all think that anybody can work satisfactorily in a grocery store? Well, mayby for the same reason that so many men think anybody can run a grocery store and make a success of it. I take pleasure, in "showing" those husky fellows, who think that driving a waggon is a "snap." It gives me huge joy to kill 'em off in a week or less, tire them dead out and teach them that, if they are going to be grocers, they have to work for their knowledge honestly, laboriously, faithfully.

Three weeks ago a farmer friend of mine came into the store and on my asking what he wanted, I learned that he was "looking for a job."

A Settled Old-timer.

I looked incredulous, but he assured me it was "straight." He'd rented his farm for five years, expecting to go West, etc. I liked him. I went right to the point with him. I asked him how much he wanted to take up the work, hustle like a Trojan and do things up brown generally. "Forty-five dollars a month"—he did not mince matters. Then I settled down and talked with him. I said to him: "Jim, I am perfectly ready and willing to pay you $45 per month if you will earn it. I have no objection to paying that sum or more, providing the man is a fifty-dollar man. But my experience has been, during the past four or five years, that, when I have hired hired a forty or forty-five dollar man, I have got $25 or $30 worth of work." Well, he'd done that kind of thing before—used to drive for old Tom Smith 'way back thirty years ago and knew just what the work was. I tried to assure him that things had changed and all that, but he was certain.

A Period of Striving.

Well, we put in lots of time on Jim. We knew he was older than many and that such a man must be taken more slowly. We hoped that we'd get it back in greater accuracy and more faithful performance. We figured that some of the "loose ends" would be gathered together and made taut. I think I am safe in saying that we gave that man a chance if ever man was given a chance. But it was no use. He'd forget to load this, or he'd neglect to deliver that or he'd get names and addresses all mixed up. He'd forget to put his lantern on the waggon at noon and he'd be without it after dark and have to use matches to see. Finally, one morning we were saluted by a series of inquiries from a number of customers. "Where are my goods, ordered yesterday, to be delivered last night?" When Jim got to the store, we found he'd "forgotten" his weight the day before, his horse had left him on the last trip and gone to the barn, and Jim, thinking that what did not get out to-night would do all right the next day, went home. He had half the stuff on when he came up in the morning.

Discovered Failings.

Jim was frank about it. He said he had found things "different." He had discovered that he was too old—should have begun twenty years before. He had come to me thinking this delivery business was a "snap"—"just sit on the waggon and drive a single horse—nothing hard in that." But he had found that it was hard work. Hard work? Of course it's hard work. They learn that the whole business is hard work. It's the pace that kills. These farmers have no idea of how to do things quickly. They may move a big load, but they take all day to do it.

Expensive Bad Memories.

It takes me a long time and many a hard scold to get my boys to remember that cans and jugs and delivery crates and egg boxes cost money. They take a can of oil—profit, 12c—and leave with the oil the can which cost about 45c and sells for 65c. They indiscriminately leave delivery crates at Thomas', Richard's and Henry's house costing a snug 50c each. Well, I tell them that I'd rather pay the money to them, but since they insist on making me pay it for renewed equipment, I cannot make wages any higher. I have to-day a very well-meaning young man working for me who cannot "get next" to this idea. The result is he is getting $30 and will get it for some time. He'll work for it until he either sees this point and acts on it, or until he's much more valuable in other directions. Why, if that boy could hustle just a little faster, be a little more accurate and take care of cans, jugs and other packages, he'd be pretty near O.K. I'd gladly pay him $45 or even $50 per month.

Why might it not be a good idea for the prospective clerk when applying for a position, to try to discover whether he could do the work before asking about the pay? It has always seemed to me that something is due to the man who is going to pay the wages—it is surely not all for the clerk.

Two Green Boys.

I had a rather amusing experience recently—amusing, that is, except for its most troublesome inconvenience and loss to Johnson & Son. Two young fellows came to me for jobs. I needed both and hired both. One knew the town pretty well and the other had been here only three weeks. Neither had ever delivered groceries. I told them I'd pay the one who knew the town $30 and the stranger $25 to start. Both worked well. I was pleased with them and was just watching for some weak points before giving them advances.

The $25 boy came to me after five days' work and asked how he was doing I told him: A 1, considering how little he knew the town. I told him I was going to figure him $30 from the start instead of $25. Well, without further ado, one morning he had a better offer and was going to quit Saturday. I was sorry, but had no more to say. Then came the other the same way. I asked what had made them do it without giving me a chance. They told me they had been talking matters over with the $30 young man about whom I have just told you and he had said he was promised $35 next month. That was too slow for them and they had decided that, if they could get something better, they would take it.

Figuring Ahead.

"You see," said one, "I had to figure ahead. I could not pay board and save anything to speak of for clothes on $30 per month." Well, I told him he had not figured ahead, but badly behind, for he was just in line for promotion and would get good wages soon. I told him to go off to his new job and stay long enough to do right by his new boss, give him time to get somebody else in his place, and then come back to me at $40 per month. The other man I rehired on the same deal at $45 per month. Both had "made good."

"Now," I said, "hereafter when you want to talk over wages and prospects, come to me—don't chew things over with the one who is moving upward a good deal more slowly than he ought to do."

And that's another trouble I have. All these boys are ready to discuss the management, the financing, the advertising, etc., among themselves—help me run my end of it, in fact. I told these fellows, as I have told hundreds of others, to run their end and let me run mine, and things would be so much better all round.

Have I tired you old fellow with this week's talk? If I have, please let your boys read it—'twon't tire them and it's possible they may get a little good out of it.

Interesting Budget From Montreal

Question of Early Closing Exciting Grocers of Eastern Metropolis—Dealers are Objecting, and Say Two Nights Sufficient —The Liquor Trouble—Delivery After Hours — Address on American Systems of Accounting—Potatoes and Tariff.

Montreal, April 5.—The question of early closing has been brought prominently before the local grocers of late and at a recent meeting of the Retail Grocers' Association a strong protest was registered against the proposal of the early closing association to have retail stores in the city closed on Tuesday evenings as well as Wednesday and Thursday as at present. One of the reasons of objecting to a further reduction of the shop hours is that many of the grocers do considerable business in the evenings. They say that the departmental stores down town attract purchasers during the day time and as far as prices are concerned they cannot hope to compete with most of the cut rates offered. As it is, they are closed two evenings in the week and that, they consider, is sufficient. The early closing association is composed largely of clerks and assistants who are seeking to ameliorate their own conditions as much as possible.

Liquor Retailing.

The grocers are also in a dilemma as to whether they shall obey the municipal or provincial law in regard to the selling of liquor after certain hours. The general secretary, J. A. Beaudry, introduced the question. The new provincial law comes into effect on May 1st and forbids any grocer who has a liquor license from selling after 11 o'clock every week day except Saturday when 7 p.m. is the closing hour for these particular sales. The law does not interfere with the sales of other goods nor with the delivery of articles which had been ordered before these hours. This was a question that elicited considerable discussion for it was thought the law might prevent the delivery of liquor ordered before the prescribed hours. The authorities will be asked as to how they intend to apply the law. The municipal law says that stores must close at 7 p.m. on Wednesday and Thursday and thus the two laws conflict. Several members of the association were disposed to keep their stores open on these days after seven o'clock, in spite of the early closing municipal law. A motion to this effect was, however, defeated by a large majority.

J. P. Tremblay, representing the St. Pierre Union of Grocers' Clerks presented a resolution passed by that organization to the effect that they would not take part in the movement to secure early closing for Tuesday night as well as Wednesday and Thursday.

An interesting talk dealing with American systems of accounting was given by Mr. Archambault, the representative of a large American wholesale house. In addition a hearty vote of thanks was tendered Chief Campeau for the manner in which he had responded on numerous occasions to complaints made by the association relating to certain infractions of the law.

This meeting drew a very large attendance and keen interest from the members.

EASTER WINDOW ON PACIFIC COAST.

In the accompanying window display of Carne's grocery, Victoria, B.C., both eggs and ham are given prominence in a neat and attractive manner. It will be noticed that the floor of the window is made up of different colors. The white is cotton while the other is pink, and green paper which is used in packing by manufacturers. The color effect produced was very attractive to the eye, but the photograph of course does not show this.

At the front there are three hams with two more to the rear, making a simple but effective selling display of this article. A basket of eggs and small groups of eggs are placed among the floor trimmings, making an attractive setting. Another feature is the appearance of rabbits carrying slices of ham while Rastus in the rear and above all, slicing ham actually makes one's mouth water to watch.

Flower decorations of Easter lilies are very appropriate and lend considerable effect to the whole window. The two show cards are well written and add considerably to the selling effect, as the talks on the cards are splendid. The selling power of the window might have been increased if one or two price cards had been added.

Three Clerks—Bad, Good and Indifferent

Selling Methods Employed by Three Different Clerks, as Observed by an Onlooker — The Transaction in Salmon — The Sale of Honey—The Attempt by Clerk Who Knew of Himself Nothing, and Leaned Wholly Upon the Boss.

Qualities of poor salesmanship, explanatory of why some stores are not able to keep trade, were disclosed to the writer in an establishment which he visited the other day.

A customer entered, and asked for a can of salmon.

"What kind do you want?" he asked, without making any attempt to show or describe to her the different brands carried.

The customer did not know the goods by brand very well and replied: "Oh, I guess a red salmon, about 17 cents."

"Here is one at 13 cents," said the clerk, at last exerting himself enough to pull a can off the shelf. "That's cheap for salmon."

"Well, I want a good salmon," said the customer, and the clerk offering no further suggestions, she said: "I guess I will take the seventeen-cent one."

"One can is all you want, is it?" asked the clerk, pushing a can to the front of the counter without wrapping it.

"I think I had better take two cans," she said, adding, "And would you wrap them up for me, please."

So the clerk at last got the two cans wrapped up in a certain manner, and continued his attempt to sell with: "That's all you want, is it?"

"Yes," answered the customer, and left the store. I do not believe she was highly elated over her visit or impressed with the service.

One Good Salesman.

Quite different was the salesmanship ability shown by a bright clerk in another store. A customer entered, and was approached by this clerk with a bright smile and a merry "Good morning."

"Do you keep Blank's coffee essence?" enquired the customer.

"No madam," replied the clerk, "we have not that brand at present. We used to carry it in stock until this one was placed on the market, but after a careful test of the two we decided that this is the best. I recommend this brand and believe it would give you perfect satisfaction."

"All right, I will try a bottle of it."

"Here is some excellent honey in the comb, madam. It is pure white clover, and the sections are well filled. They are worth 15 cents."

Selling Honey.

"Do you sell them 2 for 25 cents?" she asked.

"No, these are 15 cents straight, there is a darker one at 2 for 25 cents, but I would advise you to take this one at 15 cents. I think you would like it better."

"I will take two boxes of that kind, please."

"Now, what else can we send up? These oranges are excellent quality, and these large ones are especially fine flavored. They are navels,—seedless and very sweet."

The Force of Contrast.

And in this manner he continued his sale, showing many good points of salesmanship, presenting a decided contrast to the other clerk whose work I had observed.

Sometimes, proprietors are themselves responsible for clerks making a poor showing in selling goods, being a poor example themselves in some cases, and neglecting to point out to clerks just how to proceed in making a sale. Sometimes a clerk will be found who hardly knows that a certain article is in stock; sometimes he does not know the price, and rarely any talking points in connection with it. This is the fault of the merchant who should have advised the clerk when the new article arrived, told him the price and some information about it which would help in selling it.

One Hazy Clerk.

Recently a customer entered a store and enquired for a certain article. The clerk seemed to have a hazy idea that they had it but had to ask the proprietor about it first.

He got a package of the article and handed it to the customer, but did not know the price and had again to approach the proprietor for information. The customer made some enquiry about the quality of the goods and the clerk replied: "Yes, I think it's pretty good." Such a statement would not impress the customer much in regard to the quality. How much better if the clerk had understood the article and when the customer enquired, at once produced it, gave the price, and some information that would show that it was good quality, completing the sale in a business like manner.

Editor Canadian Grocer.—Will you kindly let me know what is the principal ingredient of macaroni. Is it a whole-Vermicelli is also made from the same the same material?

Winnipeg, April 1, '11

WESTERN DEALER.

EDITORIAL NOTE.—Macaroni is made from a hard variety of wheat commonly known in Canada as "Goose-wheat," and in the Western States as "Durum." It is different feom the ordinary bread-flour wheat in that it is of a yellowish color all the way through.

It is certainly very nutritious and wholesome.

Vermicelli is also made from the same wheat.

R. J. Gracey, Wellandport, Ont., writes for the name of a firm manufacturing canning machinery.

Answer.—The Sprague Canning Machinery Co., Chicago, Ill.

Editor, Canadian Grocer:—Could you tell me of some method by which cheese may be kept moist and fresh?"

Calgary, Alta., April 3.

"ALBERTAN."

Retail grocers state that if the cut portion of the cheese is kept covered with a cloth wrung out in vinegar that it will keep moist and fresh. Many grocers have considerable trouble with cheese becoming hard and dry when it has been cut into, as customers object to purchasing the dried portion. However this may be overcome by the above method which also keeps the cheese free from mold. It should also be kept in a room where the temperature is not too high. Many retailers believe that a slicing machine tends to keep the cheese in splendid shape.

HAMILTON AT HOME.

Hamilton, April 6.—The Hamilton Retail Grocers' Association held its fourth annual at home in the Palm Gardens here, and a most enjoyable evening was spent by all present. Fencing, wrestling, boxing, music and speech-making enlivened the proceedings, and when the time came for adjournment, the function was voted the most successful of all yet held.

J. A. McIntosh, president of the association, was chairman, and he was ably assisted by Bay Hill. The first number on the programme was a song by W. Pringle. John Burjan followed with a selection, in which he accompanied himself on a banjo. Earl Hyslop rendered a couple of vocal numbers acceptably. Harry Daniels, introduced as the "silver-tongued orator," made a brief speech on "Reciprocity," in which he humorously took the position that he was in favor of the proposed trade arrangement if it would but favor him. C. Mitchell and J. Ledrew fenced to a tie, and W. Lang and J. Sheridan followed with two rounds of wrestling. W. Dore, dressed in Highland costume, sang several funny songs, to the enjoyment of the gathering. J. C. McLean and Harry Bolton also contributed musical numbers.

At the close a vote of thanks to the entertainers was moved by Ald. Forth, and seconded by J. O. Carpenter. Ex-Controller Allan and Controller McLaren moved and seconded, respectively, a vote of thanks to the association on behalf of the guests, and the gathering broke up with the singing of the National Anthem.

INFORMATION FOR BUYERS.

Supplied to the Trade by Sellers.

H. J. Packer & Co., Ltd., have once again sent out their well-known representative, J. T. Wright, to Canada, for an extended period. He sailed on the "Empress of Ireland" on Friday, March 24th, and is carrying a considerable number of new lines, in addition to the range of last season. These will be well worth the attention of all buying houses.

H. Laporte of the wholesale grocery firm of Laporte, Martin & Cie., Ltd., Montreal, leaves on April 11th for Europe where he will spend three months combining pleasure with business.

PICKLES BECOMING SCARCE.

Although there has been no further advance in the price of pickles, The Grocer would beg to impress upon dealers throughout the country the importance of getting in a good supply as early as possible. There will be a big demand coming soon, and as there is a distinct shortage of stocks, due to a light crop of the vegetables that go to make up the raw materials of manufacture. there seems to be a remote possibility that somebody is going to go short when ordering time comes.

Manufacturers are not saying much on the subject, but it is not altogether improbable that they may be heard from in the near future. So it surely behooves all good dealers to get busy and put in a goodly store of the product to tide them well on to next crop goods.

SELLING SYRUPS.

While the grocer is intent on selling maple syrup now he should remember that when attention is thus generally directed to syrup the opportunities for selling all kinds of syrup are much enhanced.

For instance the man with the slender purse hears about maple syrup just the same as the man who can afford to buy five or ten gallons of it. The former, however, feeling that he is not in a position to buy the dearer syrup looks around and buys corn syrup. And the latter is decidedly wholesome and good although it is not maple.

It is an established fact that during the maple syrup season the demand for corn syrup increases. This principle is true in every line of business and the grocer who is ever on the alert for new openings will keep it in mind when his customers are in his store during the present season.

EARLY CLOSING IN CALGARY.

Calgary is in the throes of a discussion on early closing, and seems to be experiencing some difficuly in deciding the case one way or the other.

The original proposal was to close all the stores in the city on Saturdays at one o'clock, and have them remain so until Monday morning. As in all such issues there was a line up of opposing forces immediately. Some contended closing was the proper, and modern thing to do. Others insisted with equal vehemence that it would hurt the city to have folks come in on Saturday from outlying districts only to find the shops closed. Each side, at last reports, was lying on its case.

A couple of meetings were held but no advance was made, the given reason being that the secretary had written the secretary in Winnipeg for a copy of the early closing by.law in force in the western metropolis, and that the paper had not arrived. But now, from latest reports, it would appear that this document has been forwarded, and that it has changed the whole complexion of the Calgary issue. Under the Winnipeg legislation, all shops and stores, excepting hotels, taverns, refreshment houses, tobacco stores and news stands have to close at six o'clock in the evening on all week days, to remain so until five o'clock the following morning, except on Saturdays and nights preceding holidays, when ten o'clock is the set time. According to advices from Winnipeg, this law seems to be working satisfactorily and to be generally well observed.

It seems that this by-law is more to the liking of the Calgary advocates of early closing, and it is possible the by-law, if passed in that city, will be modelled along its lines.

It is a step in the right direction. It may be necessary to keep open for a considerable time on Saturday night, but it is not so for the other evenings. Most dealers do business so late on Saturday because the next day happens to be Sunday, when no man can work. But ten o'clock, except in a few isolated cases, is late enough, and there are eastern Canadian centres that could, with profit, follow the lead of Winnipeg in this regard.

SMALL DEBT COURTS.

A delegation from the Western Retail Association recently petioned Premier Roblin, of Manitoba for relief from the "small debt" handicap, and the members seem to have received a favorable reception.

They asked that "debt courts" be established throughout that province, under the jurisdiction of stipendiary magistrates with power to decide claims for debts up to fifty dollars. This is a step in the right direction. The Premier promised favorable consideration and it is possible a bill may be introduced at the next session of the legislature covering the request.

In presenting their petition, the delegates urged that the merchant was considerably handicapped by the existing law; that the cost of lengthy proceedings prevented him from making full use of the courts in securing settlement of his small bad debts. They requested therefore, that in the court they asked for, the dealer could act as his own lawyer and serve his own processes to cut down the expenses; that the presiding magistrate be given authority to give judgment for the amount due, and to sentence for a term of imprisonment should default in payment ensue.

The retail world will watch with interest the result of this petition. Should the Manitoba Legislature be radical enough to pass a bill covering the need, retailing in that province will have been made a great deal more satisfactory.

All live associations of retailers in all the other provinces of the Dominion would do well to follow the lead of this Western organization. It is full time the bad debtor, as a class, should be utterly banished from the community.

HOGS ON TOBOGGAN SLIDE.

The gentle and unsophisticated hog seems to have struck the toboggan slide in earnest. Last week there was a decline of ten cents on a hundred pounds, and in this, again there has been a further reduction of twenty cents, bringing the price of the porker down to 6.45 for best grades at country points.

The cause is said to be in the steady weakening of the British provision market, for this has been in progress for some little time. But there also has been a fairly heavy supply of late, which nearly always means a lower price, no matter what the state of the British and Interprovincial markets. The stock yards in Chicago have been deluged with fat butchers, and reports from that centre have been pointing to lower quotations for the last week or two.

Doubt as to the adoption or otherwise of the reciprocity agreement with the United States is another factor. There seems to be an unrest throughout the counitry, dealers buying only in small quantities as a result. In consequence, packers are not putting forth desperate efforts to secure the raw material, and as there are lots of hogs in the country the decline was quite in the natural order of things. There are some dealers who implicitly believe that the bottom has not yet been reached.

Postmaster-General on Parcels Post

Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux Explains in House of Commons That Rural Sections Were Prejudiced Against the System as Favoring Big Mail Order Houses—Suggests Campaign of Education Among the Merchants to Show its Advantages.

Only the strenuous opposition of country merchants, apparently, has prevented Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, the Postmaster-General of Canada, from instituting a system of parcels post in the Dominion similar to those operating in England, and several other European countries. The matter came up in the House of Commons recently by one of the members asking how far the matter had gone. The reply of the Minister, in which he suggested a "campaign of educaeion" to show the advantages to country dealers, was as follows :

"I have received within the last two or three months several representations on the proposed establishment of a parcels post, and I am at present engaged in finding a solution of the existing difficulty. I am not at liberty to say what I intend to do in the matter. If my hon. friend will wait until later in the session I may be able to be more communicative in my statement. At present, nothing is decided. The trouble is, I may say, that there is a prejudice in the rural sections of the country against a parcels post.

Country Merchants Opposed.

"The country merchants are opposed to the parcels post system. When I took office some years ago, I thought that the Post Office Department should really do the business of a parcels post, instead of leaving that altogether to the express company ; but the moment I expressed the view that we should establish something like the perfect systems of parcels post that they have in England, France, Germany and Italy, I found that there was a strong prejudice against the system in the minds of the country merchants, who feared that such a system would work exclusively to the advantage of such establishments as Eatons, in Toronto and Winnipeg, and Morgan's and Carsley's, in Montreal. I was deluged with petitions some four or five years ago when I thought I should do some progressive work in that field of operation. I think we should carry on a campaign of education among country merchants to show that such a system would not be against their advantage and that they would be the first to benefit by it. We are studying the question now and later on I may have a statement to make."

That Other Campaign.

Readers will recollect that this vital matter was taken up by The Canadian Grocer some months ago, and that as a result of the campaign inaugurated by this paper, a large number of opposing letters were sent on to the Minister.

His present utterance would carry the impression that since the time the first proposal was rendered abortive he has been endeavoring to hit upon some happy means by which he can overcome the objections that have been offered to the scheme.

Throughout the entire Dominion retail dealers will await with deep interest the next move in the game, and the inauguration of the "campaign of education," which Hon. Mr. Lemieux hints at in the statement given above.

SIGNS OF UNREST IN PROVISION MARKETS.

mer. As to profits he could not say. But he said there seemed to be at present an unrest throughout the entire country and that people were buying only on a hand-to-mouth basis. He hoped all this would change, but seemed doubtful on account of the great numbers of packers who were represented by agents in all the big centres, making competition keener and more keen all the time.

The Lower Scale.

One year ago, the price of dressed hogs on the Toronto market was $4 higher than now, while live hogs now quoted at $6.65 were $9.60 per cwt., said to be the highest price in forty years. There has been a correspondingly large reduction in pork products during the year, as will be seen by the following comparison :

	Yr. Ago.	Now.	Red.
Long clear bacon—lb....	15¼	11¼	3¾
Smoked breakfast bacon.	19	17¼	1¾
Roll bacon	16	12½	3½
Light hams	18	16	2
Medium hams	18	15	3
Large hams	17¼	13	4¼
Shoulder hams	14¼	12	2½
Backs—plain	21	19	2
Backs—peameal	21¼	20	1¼
Heavy mess pork	29.00	21.00	8.00
Live hogs	9.60	6.65	2.95
Dressed hogs	13.00	9.00	4.00

One important reduction to a large number of merchants has been that in long clear bacon which is now 3¾ cents lower than a year ago, while roll bacon has been reduced 3½ cents. Present prices must be most satisfactory to dealers as during the time of high prices, profits in many cases had to be clipped pretty short.

As may be seen by a glance at the chart given above the movement of hogs in June and July was rather light. With the coming of fall this was changed, and since there has been an almost uninterrupted lowering of price. Still, as the pork packer says : we still are a long way from the five cent hog.

Lard and Smoked Meats.

Lard generally follows the trend of the provision market, and, like other pork products is governed to large extent by the price of the live hog. However there are other things. Sometimes accumulation of stocks will cause the market to weaken or a shortness of supply cause it to strengthen. At times too, hogs do not contain so much lard as at others. For instance a year ago, when the price of hogs was high they did not produce much lard, being lean. However, at the present time, hogs are more plentiful and fatter, so that lard prices are quite reasonable. There is said to be a great deal of compound lard being offered and sold on the market at the present time, consumers finding the lower grade article suitable for certain use. A year ago when lard was high there was a large amount of compound lard sold.

Below is given a comparison of lard prices now and a year ago.

	A Year Ago.	Now.
Lard—tierces	16¾	11½
Lard—tubs	17	12
Lard—pails	17¼	12¼
Lard—compound	13	10¼

Smoked roll, quoted a year ago in Toronto at 16 cents, can now be had for 12½ cents, so that it can be said to have followed closely the downward trend in the market during the past year. It fluctuates with the provision market as do the other lines of smoked meats. There are two reasons for smoking meats—one is to preserve them, and the other is to flavor them. Some people like their flavor and for this reason there is a trade for them during the whole year. The demand increases as the weather grows warmer, and the height of the season is during the summer.

The changes in the price of smoked roll and smoked bacon in Toronto since last year are given below :

	Year Ago.	Oct. 7, '10.	Now.
Smoked Breakfast Bacon.	19	20	17¼
Smoked roll	16	15	12½

H. Laporte of the wholesale grocery firm of Laporte, Martin & Cie., Ltd., Montreal, leaves on April 11th for Europe where he will spend three months combining pleasure with business.

AN INVESTMENT WORTH WHILE.

Editor Canadian Grocer,—I am a faithful reader of your paper and derive much good from it. I watched your advices on sugar and have made the price of subscription for TWENTY YEARS in the last few weeks.

Wishing you every success.

QUEBEC MARKETS

POINTERS—

Nuts—Several advances.

Tapioca—Decline of 1 cent.

Canned Lobster—Price advanced.

Montreal, April 6th.—The grocery business in this section continues highly satisfactory to the wholesale trade and reflects conditions that must please the retail grocers. There has been nothing of an outstanding character of late, trade being rather quiet than otherwise.

One wholesaler directed attention to a fact that no doubt has been generally observed. The scarcity in apples has helped the sale of canned apples and as this price advanced, buyers' attention was directed to dried apples. In all these lines the supply is limited and in each case good prices have been obtained. The general scarcity of dried fruits has been good for evaporated peaches of which stocks seem to have been heavier and a good business has been reported.

A scarcity of lobsters has advanced their price and also that of canned lobster and the latter quotations are likely to keep on going up. The high prices on some lines of canned goods have diverted demand to other lines with good results. Other instances might be named to show how this has worked out.

Sugar has been conservative in its actions of late. A report dealing with primary markets says there is a large quantity of sugar to come forward and that it should be gotten out of the way to make room for the 1912 crops if the industry is to be healthy. "It can be done if prices are not put too high before trade is ready for them and the market will get along much better by not traveling too fast." The report intimates that present values are likely to be maintained and that if business is good further advances will come naturally.

The recent sales of coffee did not even cause a ripple in the local market which has been practically unchanged since the first of the new year. This is a fact worth noting and is explained by the large purchases of coffee last fall.

Nuts are as firm as ever and several advances in prices have been recorded.

Sugar.—The local market is fairly steady. It is not attracting special attention just now for the reason that buyers are not falling over themselves as was noticed some weeks ago. One jobber states that he does not expect heavy business again until May. This is, of course, under ordinary conditions. It is apparent that the trade in this locality are fairly well supplied with sugar.

Syrup and Molasses.—There is a steady market in syrups and it should be extended for quite a few weeks yet. The grocer should remember his syrup trade, especially now when with maple syrup coming on the market attention is directed that way. There is a good enquiry for molasses and the market remains steady.

Dried Fruits.—Dried fruits are practically unchanged as far as prices go this week. Evaporated apples, peaches and apricots are firm and are practically entirely out of first hands. In regard to prunes it is only reiterating what has already been said to the effect that present supplies are light and the market is, and is likely to continue, decidedly firm. The demand is steady and in some lines may be expected to show an increase in the near future. Raisins, for instance, during April and May, begin to show an improvement in trade.

Nuts.—Supplies in this market are quite limited. The tendency among the houses is to advance prices and higher quotations have been announced by several, thus indicating the strength of the market. Tarragona almonds, peanuts and walnuts are firm and although demand is not particularly brisk, still it is considerable. Reports say stocks are decidedly short in a number of lines which, with the other conditions, would suggest still higher prices before a relief will be forthcoming.

Coffee.—Since the second day of January the local coffee market has been unchanged and indeed the general market while fluctuating more or less has not undergone any marked change. This condition, as far as Montreal is concerned, is due largely to the fact that buying during the intervening weeks has been light. Last fall the large grocery houses stocked up freely and they have not yet disposed of their holdings. The recent valorization sale has not had the slightest effect locally, nor even in New York, according to a Montreal authority and it is not expected that there will be much change until May. Demand is fair and prices are unchanged.

CANNED GOODS

TORONTO.—A moderate volume of business is being done in the various lines of canned goods. Vegetables command a steady trade, but it is of a hand to mouth basis, and the total volume of sales could not be called large. Peas are not going out to any great extent, the high price restricting sales. In the case of peas, corn or beans can sometimes be substituted by the dealer, so that this line is not getting the attention it otherwise would. An increase in the trade in canned apples is noted by some houses. This is due, no doubt, to the scarcity and high price of evaporated apples, and this may be the means of bringing higher prices for apples, which are firm at present quotations. The market is extremely bare of canned lobsters and $2.75 is the ruling price for any that are obtainable. The new pack will not be on the market until June and prices will likely rule high on account of the bareness of the market and the strong export demand which is boosting prices.

MONTREAL.—The demand in this line is reported good. Peas are said to be moving better and a number of large order were recently filled, together with good business on a smaller scale. Canned lobster is again advanced and from all reports is likely to remain higher as supplies at first hand are light. Those centres which are the heaviest purchasers are hard put to secure supplies and the local market gives evidence of that effect. The wholesale houses report a continuance of good demand in general, the better grades of salmon contributing largely to the present trade.

POINTERS—

Canned Apples—Firm.

Brazil Nuts—New crop higher.

Canned Lobsters—Stocks about done.

Toronto, April 5.—The raw sugar market has become firmer again after the slight setback of last week. Its steady position has been regained and it is believed by some that the next movement in refined will be upward. Trade in sugar continues quiet, retailers having evidently taken on all the sugar they care for at present.

The canned goods market remains steady and has lost none of its firmness. A fair trade on a hand-to-mouth basis is being done in vegetables but canned peas are being slighted in the movement. The scarcity of evaporated apples has caused a better demand for gallon apples and the market at present quotations shows strength. The syrup trade is not at all confined to the new made product of maple, as both canned maple and corn syrups are receiving considerable attention.

The sale of valorization coffee in New York had no effect on the local situation which continues steady. In addition to the 300,000 bags allotted for New York for April 1, the 300,000 reserved for April 22 were also disposed of, so that the feeling of uncertainty which has kept trade throughout low in the country may be removed.

Little or no improvement is noticed in the nut trade. The market is bare of Brazils with new crop expected within two weeks which will rule higher at 19 to 20 cents.

Canned lobsters are in exceedingly short supply here, and prices are firmer on stocks still held. The new crop will not arrive until June and will probably rule higher than the opening price last year.

Sugar.—Raw sugar has regained the strength which it lost last week and at present shows a firmer feeling with raws in New York quoted at $3.86. The general situation is regarded as showing strength and some dealers believe that an upward movement will be in order soon. The easing off in raws last week gave refiners a chance to take on stocks. Trade in sugar is exceptionally quiet just now, showing that the country is well supplied. Total stocks and afloats together show a visible supply of 3,607,177 tons against 3,245,833 tons last year, or an increase of 361,344 tons.

Syrup and Molasses.—This is the syrup season and naturally all lines of syrups are brought into prominence. A steady demand continues for corn syrups and dealers state that there is a good trade passing also in canned maple syrup, for the new make is not at all plentiful in some parts, so that the canned is called on to take its place. The molasses market is quiet.

Dried Fruits.—There is no special feature in dried fruits this week. The market in general has lost none of the firmness which has characterized it during the whole season. Prunes and raisins are steady at the higher prices which dealers asked last week. The same scarcity of stocks continues. Prunes being in such small supply and quoted at such high prices, one dealer states that a quantity of the trade has been shifted to dried peaches which still continue around ten cents. The production of peaches last year was larger relatively than that of other dried fruits, but the scarcity of other lines has resulted in a large consumption, so that stocks are not at all plentiful. Some dealers report figs in tapnets are growing shorter in supply.

Tea.—Prices of tea continue firm on this market and dealers find it necessary to make slight advances at times on certain lines as the primary market grows stronger. Prices, compared with a few years ago, are high and the primary markets do not give much hope of lower values. The continued firmness in common and low medium descriptions has been the feature of the Indian market during the past month. With it has been coupled a strong demand for the small supply of finest kinds. Among Ceylons, the moderate quantity on offer passed with a firm tone for all grades. Weather reports from Japan are to the effect that conditions have been favorable so far, both for a big crop and for a production of especially good leaves.

Coffee.—In local coffee there is no change in the situation, the sale of the Brazilian Government coffee having no effect whatever on local conditions. The market is unchanged in regard to price while trade is keeping to about the usual volume. A local dealer, in speaking of the situation, said: "The general position of coffee continues as strong as ever and future prices can be expected to be at least firm. From the present outlook I do not expect to see any cheap coffee. The prospects for the growing crop will no doubt be the point on which coffee prices from now on will be determined to a large extent. New York reports: "The spot coffee market is quiet and steady, though it is hoped that improvement will result once the country has absorbed the news that no more valorization sales will be held here this year. Some coffee was offered for resale and it was suggested that this meant that a substantial portion of the 600,000 bags had been underwritten by insiders who would sell to lighten their load."

Rice and Tapioca.—Trade in both rice and tapioca is only normal. The primary markets in rice exhibit an upward tendency, while tapioca, if anything, is pointed the other way.

Nuts.—If dealers intend pushing the sale of nuts at Easter time, they have not as yet purchased supplies, as wholesalers report no improvement in the trade. Prices are steady. The market is bare of Brazils at present but new crop is expected to arrive in a week or ten days, and will rule higher at 19 to 20 cents per pound.

Beans.—In Michigan the bean market has declined about 30 cents per bushel. This year farmers held on to stocks expecting prices to advance in the spring as they have done other years. Stocks now are found to be large with a consequent decline. There are some dealers who believe the situation in Ontario to be somewhat similar, with farmers holding stocks for higher prices. There are others though who take a different view and believe that stocks, especially of good quality, are not larger than will be required.

Evaporated Apples.—The same scarcity of stocks continues, with holders who have supplies asking high prices. The ordinary trade will likely be diverted to other lines of dried fruits while canned appled will also be called on to take their place.

Brooms.—Fire recently destroyed 50 cars of broom corn at Charlston, Illinois, and will no doubt have the effect of putting more strength in the market here. One broom manufacturer in speaking of it said: "The fact that 50 cars of corn from a good corn district have been taken from present supplies will no doubt have some effect in strengthening prices in the broom market, but is not expected to make any material change in prices. The loss of this corn, which was being held by brokers, is regrettable from the fact that it was said to be of good quality, whereas choice corn is scarce this year." Speaking in regard to the price of brooms he said: "Brooms are fully 25 per cent. cheaper this year than last. Last year broom corn was extremely scarce and prices were forced to a high level, Brooms have been selling well, dealers evidently preparing for the house-cleaning season. The quality is gradually being improved, which is a good thing, giving better satisfaction to dealer and customer. Out of orders amounting to 3,800 dozen, 90 per cent. were for high grade."

Seeds.—The seed market is steady and shows very little change. The continuance of cold weather which has delayed the beginning of seeding has kept trade quieter than it otherwise would have been, but with favorable climatic conditions, the trade will likely be brisk. Clover, alsike and timothy are steady. Irish cobler and Delaware seed potatoes are quoted at $1.25 per bag.

POINTERS—

Raisins.—Advanced.

Prunes.—Advanced.

Nuts.—Heavy demand.

Cream of Tartar.—Strong.

The general grocery trade is very active, and local wholesalers report the retail condition throughout the country in splendid shape. At the present time all wholesalers are in the midst of stocktaking, and it is difficult for them to find time to fill orders satisfactorily. Not only is there a scarcity of time, but stock-taking has revealed to them that there is a scarcity of stock in almost every line, and local houses are exerting considerably in making equivalent and satisfactory deliveries.

The general consumption of the goods comprising a much wider range of lines than it is possible for us to quote, is very heavy in every part of the west, including the most remote centres. Farmers and villagers alike are buying freely, and retailers are making satisfactory turnovers, and the future season's outlook is certainly very satisfactory. Manufacturers are being taxed to supply stocks, and the whole commercial machinery seems to be running with a full head of steam.

Sugar.—We quote B. C. granulated at $5.15 to-day and there is little prospect of lower prices, as refineries are scarce of raws and are finding it difficult to supply the demand. There is plenty of stock in the west and merchants need not suffer from scarcity.

Dried Fruits.—A heavy demand continues on the complete line. Prunes have been advanced in anticipation of an exceptionally heavy demand for camp supplies. Pears, peaches and apricots are firm, and the demand is excellent. Only a moderate demand is being felt for currants, but the price is still fairly strong.

Syrup Market.—The syrup market is still very weak, and there is no change in the price. The ordering is fairly good, but not what it ought to be at the following figures, as the quality is quite up to the standard. Wholesalers have a big stock on hand in anticipation of a big season on account of the construction camp ordering, and there is good reason to believe that they will not be disappointed. Molasses is unchanged and the ordering is moderate as usual.

Beans and Peas.—There is no change in the price of beans and peas, and there has been a most tremendous demand for supply. There is quite a scarcity on the local market, and almost every merchant's order has to be cut down. It is reported that both split and whole peas are to be advanced. The price of whole peas is about $2.35 today.

Tapioca and Sago.—We are making the following quotations on these lines, but there is no rigid price being quoted. Our price on tapioca is the maximum, and the price on sago is the minimum price, as sago is advancing. Barley is very scarce, the price is stiff and the demand good.

Coffee.—A temporary weakness prevails in the coffee market, but the prices are still held very firm. Higher prices may be expected in a short time as a better demand will be created and it is a well-known fact that stocks in crop centres are not heavy.

BRITISH COLUMBIA MARKETS.

Vancouver, B.C., April 6.—There is quite a stringency in the potato market. Supplies are small and it looks as if the price will go to $50 a ton before the early summer article arrives. Two enterprising Japs, quick to learn the methods of the country of their adoption, are holding, it is said, potatoes for a good price. Enquiry was made at Yakima, in eastern Washington, as to prospects of getting supplies, and the reply was that the price would be $35 without freight or duty, which would bring the jobbing price up to about $45 a ton. The Japanese potatoes are said to be soft as they are grown in a warm climate. As it now stands it is not known where the potatoes will come from. It is not known either where there is a surplus, but with a strong demand it is expected that supplies will come from either Canada or the United States.

Floods in California held up orange shipments for a couple of weeks, and there was quite a local scarcity of this fruit. With the settling of the waters carloads have arrived.

Tomatoes are here from Mexico and Florida, but their color seems to be against them. They are pale as yet.

NOVA SCOTIA MARKETS.

Halifax, N.S., April 6.

With the arrival here this week of a number of fishing vessels, and the majority of them taking on supplies before proceeding to the Banks, the wholesale grocery trade was brisk. Then navigation is opening at the coastal ports, and vessels are beginning to make regular trips, all of which materially helps business. One Halifax wholesaler is reported to have placed an order for one thousand barrels of sugar this week.

With the exception of dried fruits there is not much change in prices. Evaporated apples have been advanced from 11 to 12½c and prunes are 2c per lb. higher. The market is well stocked with Spanish onions of fine quality they being quoted from 2½ to 2¾ cents.

Eggs continue to drop, but the demand shows no marked changed. The low price does not seem to be any inducement to purchasers.

Butter receipts are rather light with prices unchanged.

Pork products are easier, hams and bacon being down one cent per pound.

Apples are scarce, and good stock is hard to get.

Some spies marketed this week sold for $5.50 per barrel. These prices are pretty stiff for the home market.

NEW BRUNSWICK MARKETS.

St. John, N.B., April 6.—Few changes were recorded in the local market last week. In the provision line domestic pork is easier, being now held for from $22.50 to $23.50. Compound lard is also off a quarter of a cent per pound, the quotation being 11½ to 12 cents, in tubs. Eggs are fairly plentiful at 20 cents per dozen by the case and 22 to 23 cents for new laid stock. Butter is selling at 20 to 22 cents in tubs and 21 to 24 cents for rolls.

Maple sugar is now on the market and is selling at 12 to 14 cents per pound and maple syrup at $1 to $1.25 per gallon.

INFORMATION FOR BUYERS.

Supplied to the Trade by Sellers.

Cocoa-Nut Butters, Limited, Montreal, have issued a neat little booklet of "Recipes for Household Cooking, Frying and other Baking Purposes." These will be supplied free of charge to any grocer writing for a supply, and will no doubt prove of considerable value in securing repeat orders for "Kokobut." This pure cocoanut butter is 100 per cent. pure fat and contains no added ingredients whatever, neither water nor salt, and is manufactured with the most modern plant under the mast hygienic conditions.

Orders for Wilson's fly pads already secured this year total more than a whole season's output of a few years ago.

The Crescent Manufacturing Company, Seattle, U.S.A., makers of "Manleine," have secured an injunction against the manufacturers of a product known as "Manloma," as infringing upon their rights. The Seattle firm contends also that the use of any word coined out of the word "maple" constitutes an infringement upon their registration.

The attention of the trade is drawn to the reduced price sale offered to immediate purchasers of merchandises of the best known brands announced on another page of this issue by Laporte, Martin & Co., Ltd., of Montreal. The intention of this firm is to reduce its stock through a notable reduction in prices, on goods sold for immediate delivery or for the opening of navigation. First come, first served.

As the readers are probably aware that the football games in Great Britain for the Association Cup are the great events in the British Association Football world, the leading teams are drawn against each other in a "knock out" competition, 64 teams entered for the competition, and up to last Saturday the number of teams still in were brought down to four, viz., Newcastle United, Blackburn Rovers, Bradford City and Chelsea. It is an interesting fact that every one of these four teams is composed of men trained in Oxo.

SHORT TALKS TO CLERKS

By Old Philosopher

"Not always is the race to the swift, and the battle to the strong."

The man, who said, centuries ago that this was so, had no idea that men of the twentieth century would be repeating the phrase without questioning its applicability. Undoubtedly it was a sage who penned those lines, but it was a sage who lived in an age when brawn counted for more than brain, and brute strength more than quick wit. Tact was almost unknown and was possessed only by the wise leaders of the nations. Only the mighty thews of man, and his relative domination over other men, counted. True there were traders in those days, but they were generally considered as of no use in a fight, and of little worth to the nation. Despised, they were, to be explicit.

Times Have Changed.

But now all this has changed. The things that counted least in ye olden days, count most to-day. Brain dominates brawn, and wit makes of brute strength a thing to be laughed at. Tact holds an important place and ability in business is clearly not despised. Old Mother Earth has worked many changes.

Surely there is something in these things which a clerk anxious to make his way in his calling, can turn to good account. If he takes thought on the matter at all, there must be enough in that review of changing events to induce him to strive anew toward greater things. Even if he is, as he calls it, "only a grocery clerk," what of that. Hundreds and thousands of other men are grocery clerks, too, but not all of them will remain under a boss. And men who were grocery clerks have in many cases, risen to dizzy heights in the life of the country.

Talking It Over.

Come, let us talk the matter over, you clerks who have gone into the grocery business as a definite part of your life-work ! Let us see if we cannot find some ladder of policy, up the rungs of which you may mount, if you but will, steadily higher and higher until the breezy, roomy, plateau of success is reached. What matters it if there be many besides yourself who seek the same plain. Let us content ourselves in concluding that the eyesight and foresight of hosts of these are not so good as yours, and that some will lose sight of the path, no matter how straight it runs.

The Ladder.

When a young man goes into any business, fresh and raw, he is not worth much to his employer, and won't be until he is able to do THINGS FOR HIMSELF. That is to say the Boss will not take notice of him until he sees him doing little jobs of usefulness, which he was not ordered to do. When the young chap begins to do those things and shows he really wants to learn, he will find plenty willing and anxious to teach him. There we have the first step on the ladder accounted for.

Gradually the things that seemed so frightfully hard to do at first, become easy with continuous doing, and the clerk is ready for something else. If he is a good boy, he will want that something to be useful. The Boss tells him to study the stock, and gives him pointers on how he should sell goods. He shows him by word of mouth and practical example how to overcome difficulties. It takes longer to conquer this field, but when it is accomplished, another great big section of the ladder has been traversed. And the queer thing about it all is that the work instead of becoming irksome, and heavy, is pleasant and light. The clerk KNOWS things, understands his shelves, and his eye is ever bright with interest. He is achieving something and glories in it.

The Last Rung.

Well, then, generally speaking the only other thing a clerk must really know is the executive end of the business. He must learn how goods are bought, and how they must be sold that a profit may be returned to the Boss. He must be able to recognize leaks, and to discover methods of repairing them. He must in short, study the management. For this thing he must surely know if he would make a trial at running a store of his own ; unless he knows it thoroughly he is almost sure to fail.

But even if he never cares to launch out into business for himself, he has won for himself a definite place in the community. He has done something that others found hard, and has done it well. He has been a success. His step as he goes about his store is quick and springy. Not his the yawn of the laggard, and trouble-hunter, but the conscious elation of the victor. He has in fact, made good.

THE SENSITIVE BANANA.

The banana is an exceedingly sensitive and delicate fruit. It responds readily to atmospheric conditions and to handle at a profit during the winter, great care must be taken by the merchant. The bananas will not stand the cold temperature as oranges and apples will. Sixty degrees may be considered the minimum winter temperature, and 70 or 75 degrees for a good ripening atmosphere. If kept at a proper temperature they will keep their good color as well in the winter as the summer. Chilled fruit loses its color and taste and is bad for both dealer and customer. If your store is not warm enough at night, giving the least chance of a chill, the bananas should be covered with heavy paper, or other article to keep out the cold. Proper care would mean better fruit, an increase in trade and more profit.

TRADE NOTES.

F. H. Berdux, grocer, Tillsonburg, Ont., has sold his store at the corner of Brock and Broadway to Mr. Hicks, of Cornell. H. Tabor has taken a position as clerk with Mr. Hicks, in place of Mr. Stewardson, who has engaged with N. Stillwell.

St. Thomas, Ont., April 6.—The governors of Amasa Wood hospital have decided to buy groceries and other supplies this year wherever they can get the lowest quotation. The cost of keeping up the hospital is much in excess of the cost per head in other institutions, and the governors, it is understood, will buy out of the city any supplies which it may appear they can secure cheaper from other than local sources.

THE GROCER'S DREAM.

Last evening I was talking
With a grocer aged and grey,
When he told me of a dream he had,
I think on Xmas Day.

When snoozing in his store
The vision came in view;
Then he saw an angel enter,
Dressed in garments white and new.

Said the angel, "I'm from Heaven,
The Lord just sent me down
To bring you up to glory,
And put on your golden crown.

"You've been a friend to everyone,
And worked hard night and day;
You've cared for many thousand,
And from few received your pay.

"So we want you up in Glory,
For you have work hard;
And the good Lord is preparing
Your eternal just reward."

Then the angel and the grocer
Started up to Glory's gate,
But when passing close to Hades
The angel murmured, "Wait."

"I've a place I wish to show you,
It's the hottest place in H——,
Where the ones who never paid you
In torment forever dwell."

And, behold, the grocer saw there
His old patrons by the score;
And grabbing up a chair and fan,
He wished for nothing more.

He desired to sit and watch them,
As they sizzle, singe and burn;
And his eyes would rest on debtors
With any way they'd turn.

Said the angel, "Come on up,
There are Pearly Gates to see."
But the grocer only muttered,
"This is Heaven enough for me."

bers by the resignation of ex-mayor H. Laporte, who has vacated the presidency. It is on account of the state of his health that Mr. Laporte is retiring from this position, his physician having asked him to give up all activities outside of his own business. He also desires to spend more time at his office and to take a rest. This is the third association whose presidency he has resigned within the past few months. Mr. Laporte has an extended trip through Europe before him in which business will find a place with pleasure.

Potatoes and the Tariff.

A local dealer said in part recently in regard to the effect the proposed tariff arrangement would have on potatoes: "The present duty on potatoes is twenty cents per bushel of sixty pounds, and under the new arrangement they will enter Canada free.

"During the past five months there have been shipped into Montreal 600 car loads of potatoes, or approximately 400,000 bushels. Of this quantity 550 car loads were from New Brunswick and the balance from Ontario, Quebec, Maine and New York State. Three weeks ago when prices of New Brunswick potatoes reached 63 cents a bushel in Montreal, New York State potatoes could be laid down here at 62 cents and Maine potatoes at 60 cents per bushel after paying freight charges of 10 cents per bushel and duty of 20 cents per bushel netting the United States farmer 27 cents per bushel as against 43 cents to the New Brunswick farmer." This business man believes that the proposed agreement would crowd the New Brunswick potato out of a large part of the Canadian market it now occupies.

The Milk Question.

Many of Montreal's grocers sell milk. Although this is uncommon in the majority of cities it is quite au fait here. The writer was recently in one grocery store where the proprietor showed the care with which he handled milk. The health department want a by-law passed whereby all milk sold in stores must be bottled and therefore sealed. The grocer should welcome the move if for no other reason than it will facilitate the handling of milk. The day of the open can is about over.

Continued Success.

The annual meeting of Fraser, Viger & Co., Limited, was held on Monday evening last. The past year has been the most successful since the company was founded in May, 1885, by Alex. D. Fraser and the late Hormidas Viger. The usual dividend was declared on the paid up capital stock and a substantial amount added to the rest account in the form of undivided profits. The old board was re-elected as follows:—President, Alex. D. Fraser; vice-president, George A. Fraser; directors, J. E. Tardy, Alex. Davidson, Chas. Shepherd and Chas. P. Macklier.

The company are preparing to greatly extend their business. A branch store will be opened on Laurier Ave., in the Montreal Annex, early in May and will be followed according to the plans, by additional branches in other suburbs of Montreal and in other cities.

THE TOO-GRAND STORE.

In a small country town, a few years ago, a merchant started in the general store business. The store was built as he directed. All the latest improvements of modern stores were put in. The counters, shelves and wall cases were the best that could be had. The store was nicely decorated, fancy trimmings installed, as well as fixtures that would do credit to the best city store.

When the stock had been put in the store presented an excellent appearance. But even with good advertising and methods, the merchant could not work up a trade.

The reason for this was that the store did not fit the trade. Situated in a plain farming community, its magnificent trimmings seemed almost forbidding to customers, who would pass it in awe, to go to the next store down the street, which, if neat and clean in appearance, was not set out in such costly style.

There is such a thing as having so grand a store that it turns people away, especially in the country district, where they are used to the common and plain.

Competition—The Commercial Sieve

Run over in your mind the history of the package tea trade as you know it for ten years. You will at once agree that the outstanding feature has been Red Rose Tea coming from a tailender in Ontario and the West to a leader during that time, while many others, once prominent, have dropped far behind in the race. This remarkable success of Red Rose Tea has convinced the trade that Red Rose Tea "is good tea." You believe it, but have you proved it for yourself? We find that when grocers use Red Rose Tea in their homes they sell more of it. Every customer to whom you sell a tea that pleases her more than the tea she is using is a better customer for you. Try a package of Red Rose Tea in your home, and you'll want to recommend it to your customers. It will please more of them than any other tea.

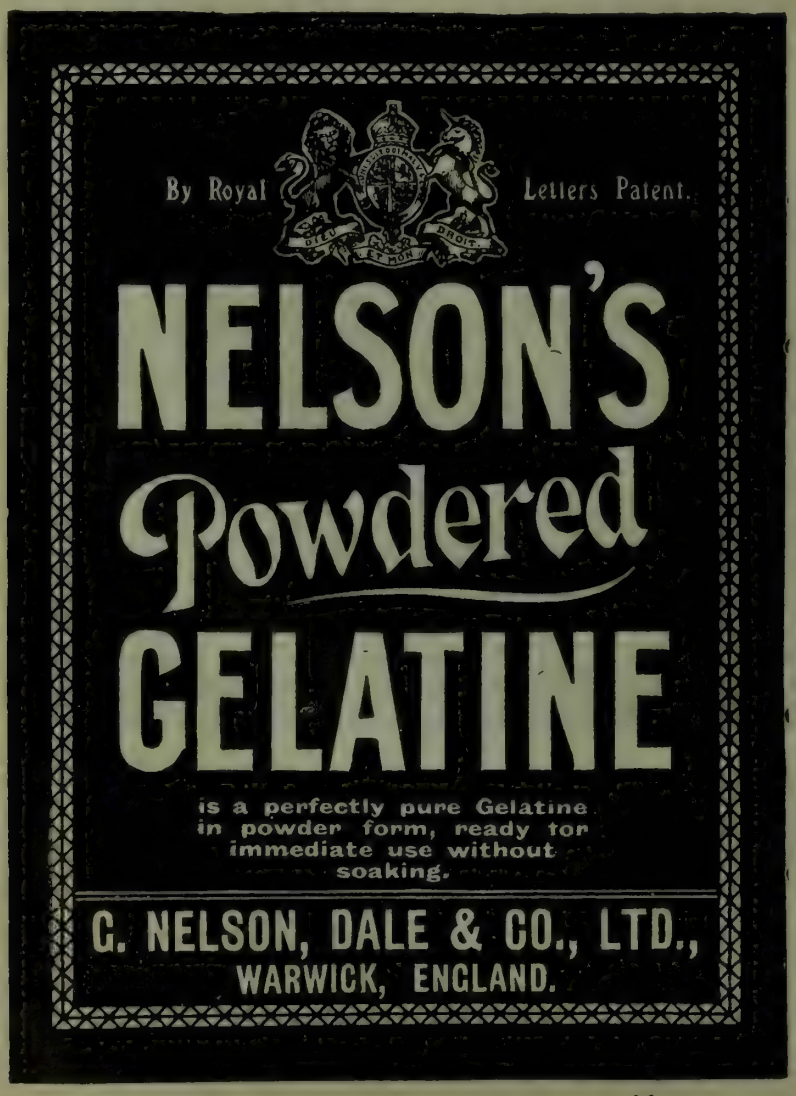
THE PENNY WISE POUND FOOLISH DEALER

A Few Instances of How Merchants in all Parts of the Country Have Lost Customers Through Little Things—A Transaction in Yeast — Inferior Goods — Over-charging — Lighting a Customer's Pipe.

The "penny wise, pound foolish" merchant, has been defined as one who sees only the immediate present and entirely overlooks the future. A case in which this was evidenced, occurred not long ago. A customer entered a country store and asked for a good brand of bread flour. The merchant recommended a particular brand, staking his reputation behind it. The customer then asked for a package of yeast. So far, good. But that day the merchant had been exploring about the store, and had discovered three packages of yeast that must have been on the shelf a terribly long time. When the customer asked for yeast, he was pleased, as it gave him a chance to work off the old goods. As a result he gained five cents and, lost the trade of that customer which amounted to a large figure annually.

Then there is the merchant who recommends inferior goods because he makes a little more profit. Such a merchant is cutting off his nose to spite his face. Every dealer before recommending an article, should be thoroughly convinced of the quality. If he is not, he need not hope that customers will place any confidence in him.



A few months ago a customer moved to a new neighborhood. She went to a nearby grocery store to make her first purchase, which happened to be a bottle of a well-known brand of goods, that retails in all stores at 15 cents. Now this grocer was one of those greedy mortals, who are always watching to pull in as much money as possible, and, thinking it was only a transient purchaser, he charged her 20 cents for the article. This lady had bought them before at 15 cents, and not wanting to pay 33 per cent. more than the usual price, she decided to deal at another store where prices were not so high.

Another merchant in an Ontario town lost a regular customer over a cent. Wanting to light a cigar he had come in for a cent box of matches. He tendered a five dollar bill in payment. The merchant took it, occupied about five minutes in making change, and came back and gave the customer his $4.99. The man, who bought on an average, $20 worth of goods a month, decided to withdraw his account from a man who would do such a small thing.

There are many other ways in which merchants are at times "penny wise and pound foolish," and this can only be guarded against by taking thought always. A business man to be successful, must be tactful. A common fault with some is that they do not analyze each case, nor measure the possibilities of the future.

No man is in business for his health or for fun. You are not, and therefore should see that you get a profit on everything sold.

One store should be able to sell goods as cheaply as another, so that the trade of the store resolves itself into a matter of service to large extent.

With Fels-Naptha soap not only is the quality there, but the profit to the merchant is better than on the average laundry soap.

The dealer who keeps Fels-Naptha well stocked is sure of a steady, fair profit on it.

More Life Is Expected In Provisions

Easter is Looked to for More Activity — Future in Provisions Uncertain—Chicago Market Rules Easier—Hogs Reduced 20 Cents in Toronto—The World's Visible Supply of Lard Shows Increase—Butter is Steady—Eggs are Easier—Plentiful Supplies for Easter Trade.

The provision market is still unsettled and uncertain. While Montreal has ruled firm this week, the Toronto market is slightly easier with a twenty cent reduction in live hogs and an easier feeling in provisions generally. While on one hand the increased demand that is expected to take place after Lent should be a cause of steadiness for the market; still, in the Chicago market the quotations for future mess pork and lard are below present prices.

Eggs are a little easier again this week under continued free arrivals. No doubt next week will see a big rush of eggs to the market for the Easter trade, but this may be counterbalanced by a corresponding increase in demand. However, the decrease in demand which is liable to take place when Lent has passed, and the expected continuation of heavy supplies is likely to keep prices easy. Dealers say that prices will have to go down to an equal basis to United States markets before they will feel safe in putting them away."

"The butter market seems to be ruling steady, more so than some dealers expected. There has been a good demand during Lent but some markets are reported quieter. The question as to price depends to a certain extent upon the stocks held. If they have been worked shorter by the good demand during Lent, even with the new make coming in, prices will rule firm. If stocks are considered too large and holders commence to force sales, weakness will probably result.

Honey and poultry continue quiet as for some time back with no new features to the market.

MONTREAL.

Provisions.—The present trade in provisions is not very heavy, but the big houses are looking forward to a good Easter trade. Enquiries thus far indicate that it is likely to be good. Prices have been steady since the declines of last week. The situation is therefore unchanged. It is expected that with increased demand higher prices will be quoted, but who can tell? On the Chicago meat market the quotations for future mess pork and lard are much below the prices now ruling.

Butter.—The butter market is reported firm and yet it is rather quiet. New Eastern Townships butter is being offered, but the tendency here is to work off the old stocks first. The question as to price depends largely upon the stocks held. If they are light it is only to be expected that prices will be stronger even with new stocks coming in.

Eggs.—New laid eggs are down to 20 cents, owing to the liberal supplies that have been offered. The price paid west of Toronto has been 15 cents, while 16 cents is the figure thae is reported in the eastern districts. For a select class of eggs 23 cents has been reported, and it is likely that this price is being received. The demand is good and even if supplies are coming in freely the demand is not far behind the surplus over last year's figures.

TORONTO.

Provisions.—The provision market shows a little easier feeling. A further drop in live hogs of 20 cents this week following last week's reduction of 10 cents is responsible for the weaker tone. While the arrival of hogs shows no material increase, the demand for Canadian bacon in the Old Country is at prices nearly a shilling lower than last week, and hogs have been forced down to 16.45 at country points. Lard is off ¼ cent per pound, while prices are being shaded slightly on backs and cooked hams. Some firms are quoting long clear bacon at 10½ to 11 cents this week. Dealers report some improvement in business this week, as tne Easter trade will no doubt put some more life into the trade.

Butter.—Butter is steady with prices unchanged. There has been some improvement in arrivals, but the market has been held by a good demand. One dealer pointed out that the heavy demand throughout the Lenten season has worked off a large quantity of old butter, which has created a firmer feeling in the new make. Creamery prints are selling from 26 to 30 cents, according to quality. Prices are expected to hold for a short time, until supplies of the new make become larger than at present, or until the demand drops off. However with the increase in the new make that is expected, prices will no doubt become easier.

Eggs.—Eggs are quoted this week at 18 cents. The demand has been brisk and stocks have been worked down to a better basis. However there is an easier feeling in the market, and dealers feel that prices will go lower, for as the roads in the country get better, offerings will be larger, which with the drop in demand that will occur after Easter, should force prices lower. Producers generally rush their eggs to the market the week before Easter, which might mean a drop during the coming week, but this may be counterbalanced by the big demand for the Easter trade.

Does Advertising Help You Any?

As between two brands of the same product, one advertised to consumers, and the other not, can't you practically always sell the advertised one easier?

Apply your answer to our Dromedary Dates, which are and have been advertised to your customers in all the leading magazines, as compared with ordinary bulk dates. Is there any comparison as to their comparative salability?

And we haven't mentioned one very important fact—their relative attractiveness. Dromedary Dates, selected fruit, clean and moist in a tight carton; and bulk dates, exposed to the dust and sold from a broken and crumbling bundle.

The carton means a good deal more in dates than it means in most other things.

Wheat Prices Drop Under Bullish News

New Low Level Reached by Cereals Because of Favorable Word as to Growth From Crop Centres—Flour Easier in Tone, But Unchanged in Price—Amount of New Business Not Large —Cereals Quiet.

Bullish estimates putting the new growth of winter wheat 35,000,000 bushels in excess of last year, aided in forcing wheat prices still lower during the latter part of last week. At the beginning of this week crop prospects were believed to have been vastly improved by the timely moisture in the wheat area and prices were forced to a new low level.

One dealer in speaking of the situation said: "Wheat has lost every friend it ever had. Every time it drops, the bottom is believed to have been reached with this belief shattered in a few days by still lower values being named. However, up to the present, all conditions have been favorable for growing crops and a continuance of such very favorable conditions can hardly be expected, although it is quite possible, so that the future in wheat is decidedly uncertain."

Through it all, flour quotations remain unchanged, prices ruling at figures that have existed since last November. Although it seems as if lower values in flour are warranted, still with the present lack of new business there may be no change. One dealer in speaking of it said: "With the present low level of wheat, there is a possibility of flour being reduced, but I cannot say that it is altogether expected at the present time. There is no telling when a reaction may come in the wheat market and flour prices will not likely be changed until it is demonstrated that wheat is going to stay at the low price."

It was intimated that some mills at least will not be in a hurry to reduce flour prices, having loaded up with wheat at a high price. It is reported that one firm took on 5,000,000 bushels of wheat at a high figure, which, with the decline up to the present, will mean a big less to them.

With the opening of the spring, trade in confectionery is expected to brighten up. Many dealers around the Easter season put forth extra efforts in this direction with good results. Along with the ordinary lines carried, maple sugar in different forms at this season is found to be a good seller.

TORONTO.

Flour.—Flour is weaker on account of lower values in wheat but there have been no changes in quotations, $5.40 per barrel still ruling. Wheat prices have dropped to a new low level during the past week, No. 1 Northern Manitoba being quoted at 95½ cents, a reduction of 2 cents per bushel over last week. With wheat at the present low level there is a possibility of flour prices being changed, but with the present lack of new business, it is doubtful whether mills will make any reduction.

MERCHANTS' EXPENSE ACCOUNT.

Some Items Often Overlooked by Many Capable Dealers.

Many merchants do not know what it costs them to do business. Many think they do, but generally their estimates fall below the correct amount, for this reason some merchants find at the end of the year that they have not made as much money as they expected.

In reckoning the cost of doing business, in most cases the merchant will include rent, clerks' salaries, light and heat, and think they have covered the items completely. Now, among the items that have to be considered in making up an expense account are:—

Rent, salaries, advertising, light, heat, delivery, management, stationery, printing, loss by bad accounts, wrapping paper, twine, decorations, fire insurance, telephone, deterioration of fixtures, cost of collections and business tax.

Of course every merchant makes allowance for a certain number of incidentals, but has he included all the following in the list:—Brooms, cleaning, donations, papers, horse shoeing, harness, nails, messenger service, pens, pencils, postage, post office box rent, repairs, soap, telegrams, free candy, free cigars, extra help, broken and destroyed goods, articles not charged and other leaks?

The merchant who looks over this list of expenses connected with the store will realize that he must get a fair profit on every article sold if he wishes to stay in business. Merchants who cut prices may find in this the reason why their financial statement at the end of the year does not show a very favorable balance.

Grocer's Encyclopedia—Grape Fruit

Some Pertinent Facts About a Fruit Which Has Been Considered the Type of Which Eve Ate in the Garden of Eden—How it Grows—Peculiarities of Shape Explained—Its Medicinal Value—Places Where it Comes From.

The Forbidden Fruit.

Whether those who first exploited this tasty tidbit, which is fast becoming so popular on the country's breakfast table, imagined it to be the original luscious dainty which caused the mouth of Mother Eve to water in the Garden of Eden to our eternal discomfiture, or not, forbidden fruit, as the grape fruit has been named, and is still known under that head in many establishments.

Strange that it should be so, for there is nothing there suggestive of punishment, but to those who have once used it will always be a source of temptation. For to taste is to like; and to like in many cases, is to become a confirmed devotee. But the name was given, some authorities say because, there is, in many samples, an indentation, as though the mark of Our Mother's fatal bite was never to be eradicated.

It belongs to the shaddock variety of the citrus family, and is the only one that is edible. "Pomelo" is the Indian name.

People have often wondered why it was called grape fruit, and when first introduced to customers it leads them to expect the flavor of the grape. The name grape primarily signifies "cluster" and as these grow on the tree in clusters, the name is thus derived.

Flatten in Growth.

The fact that they grow in clusters is important for the dealer to know. The grape fruit when received is generally flattened on one side which would lead one to believe that it was bruised or had been flattened out in the packing, and customers sometimes complain of this. This shape, however, is due to the fact that they grow in bunches and become flattened so. Dealers should explain this to customers so that they may not think the fruit is bruised.

Its Medicinal Value.

Besides being of food value the fruit is distinguished for its medicinal qualities. When eaten with sugar it makes a fine dessert fruit, and is winning favor as a breakfast food, owing to its mingled flavor of sugar and acid and because it is an excellent tonic. It is itself a food, a complete nutriment for the body; it is a great aid to digestion, and is of the utmost value in helping the body to eliminate waste matter.

While some are impressed with its flavor at first trial, it takes others a short time to acquire a taste for it. Therefore the grocer, in pushing its sale, should impress its medicinal qualities upon the customers so that they will use it, until the taste is acquired, when they generally continue without further prompting.

Care should be taken that the customer be not turned against it on first trial, which is liable unless the proper method of preparing it for use is explained. They are likely to eat it as they would an orange.

Where it Comes From.

Canada's supply of grape fruit is imported from Florida and Jamaica, and dealers state that the consumption in this country is increasing yearly. It is grown also in nearly all the West Indian Islands and in Ceylon. As previous-stated the fruit belongs to the shaddock variety, and the real shaddock fruit is 6 to 9 inches in diameter, and weighs up to 15 pounds each. The tree on which the fruit grows is most handsome and, grows 20 to 40 feet high, bearing thick glossy foliage and throwing out white fragrant blossoms. The grape fruit is the smaller variety of shaddock, and about the only kind that is edible, the others being of a very disagreeable and bitter flavor.

The quality of the fruit arriving of late years is much better than it used to be as more care is taken now in packing for shipment. At the beginning of this season, the quality of fruit was not so good as usual and as oranges were of excellent quality, trade turned somewhat to that line, but the quality of the fruit arriving now is excellent, so that it would seem to be a good time for grocers who have not done so, to introduce this fruit to their customers.

It is packed in cases running from 46s to 96s, and the Florida product on the market now is quoted at $3.50 to $3.75, and Jamaica at $2.75 to $3.00 per case. The Cuban, which is offered now is about the same price as those of Jamaica.

The Place of Talc in Confectionery

Canadian Wholesaler Says Mineral Powder is Not Used by Reputable Dealers in This Country—Talc Not a Food, but a Neutral Ingredient—Some Facts as to Mining of the Face Powder.

Up till now not even the most fanatical member of the most radical of Pure Food Leagues, have regarded minerals or mineral products as a constituent of articles of diet, and there may be a few who will, because of an article that appeared recently in a Toronto daily paper, cut off, henceforth and forever, confectionery said to include talc in the ingredients entering into the making. At any rate the reading of the item in question would not tend to increase the sale of sundry lines of candies, biscuits and other "goodies" supposed to come within the circle.

But the merchant need not stop selling these lines solely for fear that he may be giving his custamers adulterated food, as it can be fairly said that talc is not used as an ingredient of candies or biscuits in this country, at least not by any reputable dealers.

One Wholesaler's Views.

A Canadian wholesale dealer in confectionery, in speaking to The Grocer in reference to the newspaper item said: "I do not know where they got the idea that talc is used in the manufacture of confectionery. I think there is not a candy manufacturer in this country who uses the powder in making his goods. There are not at least any reputable dealers who do so, because talc is not a food at all, but a mineral that is used largely in the manufacture of face powder. However, it is just possible that some unscruplous firm might have used it, for, while it is a mineral, it is of neutral qualities and would have no bad effect on a person, other than what any article that is not a food would have. It can be said though that no reputable Canadian concerns use talc or any ingredient not pure and wholesome in the making of their candies, and the people can feel safe that in using candies, they are consuming food stuffs only."

What Talc Is.

Talc or soapstone is a soft soapy kind of mineral, commonly of a pearly grey color, but sometimes whitish green or greyish green. It is used in making face powder, employed in the lining of ovens at times, in the manufacture of paper and in slate pencils and crayons for glaziers to mark glass for cutting. One variety is known as tailors chalk.

In Central India there are about twenty-five old soapstone quarries or pits in a belt of hills known as the "Behlaipahari" Range. These pits, which are surrounded by a dense jungle, are 40 to 60 feet deep, each having a shaft 4 feet in diameter. Each pit is manned by 20 or 30 workers, the slabs of soapstone being carried up the shaft by women and children and thence to a small village by coolies to be shipped.

There are also quarries in Virginia, while Canada imports quantities from New York State to be ground fine for toilet purposes, and not to be used in making sweets and dainties, as the Toronto newspaper intimated.

VALUE OF CLEANLINESS.

Perhaps your store needs a little brightening up. Unless watched carefully the interior of the store is liable to become shabby and more or less forbidding. No one likes to purchase goods in a dirty or musty store. Especially is this true of the grocery store where food supplies are secured. Make an effort to keep everything clean, bright, and attractive. The extra effort does not amount to much and has a great effect. Customers will return again to a clean, well kept store. They will never go back to one that is unclean.

It is reported that the retail grocers of Montreal, are protesting vigorously against the proposal to close early on Tuesday night as on Wednesday and Thursday. It is also suggested in that city that where the selling of liquor by retailers is being considered, arrangements should be made to allow of sales being made, say, on Saturday afternoon and deliveries in the evening.

"Christie Biscuits sell more than Biscuits."

That's the slogan of reputable grocers from one end of Canada to the other, and reasonably:—Because if you sell her ladyship the best biscuits on the market—the biscuits she wants—it's more than likely that she'll become a tea and coffee customer too.

The reasons underlying the known superiority of Christie biscuits are not hard to understand. In the first place the big biscuit makers only manufacture biscuits. They have no side lines to distract their attention. All their knowledge of the baking business is concentrated in the making of better biscuits.

Then every ounce of raw material is of high-grade table quality—the best that money can buy.

But the real cause of success—the cause of the biggest, brightest and cleanest biscuit factory in all Canada lies in the Christie ideals. It's this whole-souled devotion to Christie ideals on the part of our happy, high-salaried and contented employes—this constant effort to improve the product of yesterday that has made the word "Christie" a synonym for biscuit perfection.

Sell her Christie's and you'll sell more than biscuits.

Strange Facts and Peculiar Proposals That Stand Out Clearly —Jam Factory in B. C.—Selling Vegetables by Weight—Montreal and Early Closing—Saving in Manchester—Taxing Mail Order Houses in Missouri.

It is reported that work will be commenced shortly on a $50,000 jam factory at Brownsville, on the south bank of the Fraser River, and near the limits of the city of New Westminster, B.C. The builders' expect to handle this season's crop. The company will market their output between Winnipeg and the Pacific Coast.

At a meeting held in Toronto last Saturday The Ontario Vegetable Growers' Association decided to sell all vegetables by weight in future. It was also decided to request the Dominion Government to pass an act fixing the following weights as bushel and bag standard:

Artichokes	56	75
Beets	50	70
Carrots	50	70
Onions	50	75
Parsnips	45	60
Potatoes	60	80

According to the analysis of 339 samples of cream of tartar made by the Inland Revenue department, from different parts of Canada, 26 were below the commercial standard and the same number adulterated. The report bulletin adds that the cream of tartar as sold by druggists is not a better article than is to be found on the shelves of the grocers.

Dr. Hastings, Medical Health Officer of Toronto, announced recently that he would institute legal proceedings against all bakers who persist in making bread in sizes not provided for in the "Bread Sales Act." April 5th was the date he set when immunity from prosecution would be at an end.

An "All British" shopping week will be held in London, Eng., from March 27 to April 3, in which the business men will give special prominence to all British products.

Some retail stores in Manchester, England, are promoting a scheme which aims at the provision of saving bank facilities for customers. Any sum may be deposited, and it is so ordered that as the small sums reach the sum of twenty shillings, it is transferred to a bank of recognized standing where it bears the usual rate of interest for the depositor.

The Lethbridge, Alta., Business Men's Protective Association object to the dumping of out-of-date and bankrupt stocks on the city's market for disposal, to the injury of the local men who pay heavy taxes and otherwise assist in building up the city. A committee composed of two representatives of each line of retail business has been apointed to urge the city council to impose a license of at least $25 per day on transient traders.

The average production of wheat per acre in Australia, the Argentine Republic, India and Russia, is from 10 to 12 bushels. In Canada it is over 18 bushels.

The first day's receipts of the little store which John Wanamaker, the great American retailer, started in Philadelphia fifty years ago, were $24.67. He kept the 67 cents for making change the next day, and immediately spent the $24 for newspaper advertising. That was about the bravest business deal he ever made.

It is generally held by all practical men that the difference between "dressed" fish and fish in the "round" is about one-eighth of the total weight; that the entrails and waste products constitute about one-eighth or 12½ per cent. of the weight of the round fish.

Under a bill passed in Missouri, catalogue houses will have to pay a license tax of 5 per cent. on the first $100,000 worth of business transacted yearly in that state; 3 per cent. on the second, 2 per cent. on the third, and 1 per cent. on each additional $100,000.

The Department of Agriculture of the United States has taken another jab at the retail grocers' profits on food products. In its March report, it makes the direct charge that while staple food products have declined on an average 30 per cent. within the past year, the retailer has given but 20 per cent. to the consumer.

Things a Clerk Should Know Ere He Becomes Manager

A clerk who had been a salesman, and a good salesman, too, in a grocery store for a couple of years became filled with the idea that he was entitled to something bigger and could see no reason why he should not make a far better income if he went into business for himself. He knew that he could sell more goods than any other man in the store in which he was employed, and believed there was no reason why he should not make it go. So he opened up a fine store in an excellent locality.

His trade became large, because he was a good salesman and sales exceeded any of the stores in the neighborhood. Things looked bright and he calculated that he was receiving an excellent income. However, when the accounting time came at the end of the year, he was astonished to find that he had hardly come out even. What was the reason? Simply because he understood little indeed about the management of a store. The big profits that he should have made on the year's business had dropped away in little leaks. For instance, his fruit business was a source of loss simply because he did not give proper attention to buying.

"Make haste slowly," is a good motto for clerks, fired with excessive ambition. While every man behind a counter should continually be trying to advance, he should remember that it takes time. It is far better to get a good training before starting into the battle. Some of this ambition to own a business should be turned into an endeavor to learn more about the business in which he is employed. Salesmanship while a mighty important thing is only one side of merchandising. There are many other things to be learned about proper management before a clerk is able to conduct a store properly.

Qualifications of Success.

The clerk busy behind the counter from morning to night serving customers, sees the boss sitting behind a desk, writing letters, giving orders, and receiving travellers and he thinks what an easy time he is having, deriving all the profits while the real work is being done by others. He sees no reason why he could not also run a business. He is counted a good salesman, has many friends, knows the goods that customers want, and dreams rosy dreams of the position he would occupy were he in business for himself.

People who contemplate entering on some new project are apt to see only the bright side, and not the troubles and worries attendant on it, while what they will be able to do if in business for themselves is in their mind, often enlarged, for "distant fields look green."

The clerk who is intending at some time to be manager, or owner, of a business (and every ambitious clerk ought to), should be on the alert to learn everything possible in the business from the ground up, so that when he starts for himself, he will not only be able to sell goods, but to manage the business, so that a fair profit on sales may be realized.

THE PRICE OF CURRANTS.

"It doesn't look from present statistics as if there would be any drop in currants, even if there may be no further advance," said a grocery broker recently. "The high prices do not seem to have made much difference in the demand so far, as up to February 1st, 97,134 tons were exported from Greece as compared with 99,229 for last season. The total production of currants for export this year amounted to about 120,000 tons, so that there are only about 20,000 tons left in Greece to carry all markets until October, while if consumption keeps up with last year, from now to the end of the season, England will want 19,216 tons more; Holland, 11,470; America, about 8,000 tons, and Germany, 1,400 tons. However, there will no doubt be a falling off in the total consumption for the year, and these figures given should be taken with the proverbial grains of salt. Nevertheless it is true that present supplies are short, especially in the lower grade fruit and that the firmness in price is quite likely to be maintained until the new crop."

Climatic Conditions Against Trade

Fruit and Vegetable Trade Adversely Affected by Colder Weather—Easter Week Expected to Bring Increased Demand —Tomatoes Enjoying Brisk Trade—Shipments of Celery About Done—Prices Expected to Rule Higher—Orange Arrivals Larger —Lemons Firmer.

Weather conditions have not been favorable to the fruit and vegetable trade of late, which is regrettable as the spring trade in these lines should be well advanced by now. However, dealers are hoping for climatic conditions soon more to their liking, when business will no doubt show more life. Easter week is expected to bring a good general trade in fruits and green goods and this will be quite acceptable, dealers being anxious to get the spring trade under way.

Tomatoes are ruling at slightly lower prices than a week ago and this has resulted in a good trade, although it has been slacker during the colder weather. The quality of the tomatoes arriving is good.

Shipments of Florida celery are about done, the season drawing pretty well to a close. The crop this year was shorter than last and, as pointed out before, prices will likely rule higher.

On account of the heavy rains in California, shipments of oranges for a time were curtailed and prices became firmer. However, larger consignment are now coming forward and the market should rule easier if present conditions continue.

The trade in lemons is quiet but should soon come into its own. They are slightly firmer as damage by storms is reported from the producing district and most dealers look for slightly higher prices.

MONTREAL.

Green Fruits.—Climatic conditions have taken on wintry appearances again with results that have not been particularly to the liking of the wholesale fruit trade. It is time now that spring was coming to its own but the tendencies in that direction are not yet very pronounced. It is stated that owing to the scarcity of apples oranges have been enjoying a good demand and as the latter have been reported rather scarce of late prices are higher and the market locally firmer. Lemons are quiet but will soon come unto their own. Otherwise the market is steady with not the interest there should be for the first week in April.

The trade are eagerly looking forward to Easter week for a good general trade and looking ahead from this stage the amount of business then to be done promises to be good. "It would need to be," said one of the men, not because it was really needed, but rather that it would put the spring trade away to a good start.

Fruit.—Apples: supplies are growing shorter on this market and prices are firming up. Barrels at present range from $3.50 to $6.50, while we hear of No. 1 Spys bringing as high as $7 per barrel. A few Washington and Oregon apples in boxes are being offered at $2.50 per box while Canadian box are bringing $2.00 per box. Supplies of Jamaica grapefruit are decreasing, but Cuban goods are being offered at the same price. Lemons are firm and dealers are looking for higher prices. Florida strawberries are growing lighter in supply and in some cases are bringing higher prices than present quotations. Louisiana's in prints are offered at 20 cents and a few Alabama berries at 18 cents. Tomatoes are offered at lower prices than a week ago, with a good trade, although somewhat affected by the colder weather.

Vegetables.—There is a firmer tendency in the potato market and the weakness apparent the past two weeks has gone. Ontario s are being quoted at 95c to $1, and Delawares at $1.10. One dealer said offerings of Ontario potatoes were quite large but that holders were asking higher prices. There is a firmer feeling also in cabbage just now. Florida celery is almost off the market and prices of present stocks are expected to stiffen. There are few home-grown onions on the market and the trade is now mostly confined to Spanish. Trade in green goods has been somewhat affected by the colder weather ruling during the past week.

THREE WINDOW SUGGESTIONS.

Seasonable Displays That Might be Profitably Employed.

This is the time when the grocer is trying to interest the housewife in dried fruits and perhaps there is no better way to attract attention than by proper window displays.

A suggestion for a dried fruit window might be: At the back of the window have a box each of prunes, figs, dates, currants and raisins tilted forward so as to be easily seen. In front of these on fancy paper, the name of the country of production is spelt out with the dried fruit. For instance: at the top, "California" will be spelt with prunes; "Turkey," with figs; "Arabia," with dates; "Greece," with currants; and "Spain," with raisins.

People are generally interested in the sources of supply and this kind of a window will draw their attention. The addition of price cards should not be forgotten.

Along the line of sources of supply, another idea in the display of articles can be worked out which will appeal to customers. Goods from different parts of the world are displayed with the name of the place they come from. Some of the articles which might be shown are: olive oil, France; lemons, Spain; jams, England; oranges, California; currants, Greece; figs, Turkey; rice, Japan; sugar, Cuba; grapefruit, Florida; raisins, Spain; tea, Ceylon; coffee, Brazil.

In the centre it would be a good idea to show Canadian flour, potatoes, butter, eggs and ham and affix a show card "Canada's big items." While this window, on account of the large number of articles shown, might lack somewhat in selling power, it would attract the public attention and serve its purpose as an advertising agent.

For a seed window, a map of Canada made on the window floor out of seeds, each province being marked out by a different kind of seed should attract attention. The display could be finished off by a showing of seeds in packages and in bags in the background and a growing exhibit of a couple of kinds on each side.

Now, with the opening of spring merchants should give some attention to the appearance of their store front. A store is judged by its looks.

Brisk Trade Expected Last Week of Lent

Weather Quite Satisfactory for Thinning Out of Frozen Fish—Fresh Goods Not Yet Offering in Large Quantities—Good Demand for Fresh Halibut—Preparations for Salmon Pack and Extensions in B. C.—Newfoundland Catch.

The market is still rather quiet with the closing week of Lent near at hand. Next week there will be a good demand for fish of practically all kinds, but the season itself is done and business will now settle down to a steady character that should be satisfactory.

Fresh fish is a little more plentiful, its arrival on the market in quantities that have recently shown an increase, marking a new departure as far as this season is concerned. With the opening of the bays, as the ice begins to move out, fresh fish will become more plentiful and supplies of fresh pike, halibut, haddock, carp, etc., may be expected. In the meantime there is some fresh fish offering, but the frozen stocks are still moving out.

The market has been steady as far as prices go during the week, quotations being influenced by the general condition of the market.

QUEBEC.

Montreal.—The local fish market is quiet. The weather man has not disappointed the trade and frozen fish is still offering. The bulk of the Lenten demand is over now, although the last week should bring a fairly heavy trade. Prices are unchanged from those that prevailed last week. Fresh fish are coming in a little more liberally and are finding a good demand.

NOVA SCOTIA.

Halifax.—Twenty cents each for nine-inch lobsters was the staggering price that greeted Haligonians this week. Never before have the prices been so high, as nine-inch lobsters are about the smallest that is marketed here. A few years ago the same sized lobster could be purchased for 20 cents per dozen, and even at that price the sales were slow. Local dealers say that even at the prevailing high prices the public bought the lobsters as usual. They seemed bound to have them at any cost. The catch along the coast during the week shows a slight improvement, as do the catches of fresh fish. There were ample cod, haddock, and halibut marketed to supply the local demand. Smelts are now off the market. Sales of fillets show a large increase, and this kind of fish is now finding favor.

Salt codfish and also boneless cod are in good demand, and the sales of salt herring are up to the average. About one thousand boxes of finnan haddies were shipped from Digby to points in New England and Eastern Canada this week.

About twenty sailors of the Lunenburg fishing fleet were here this week preparatory to going to the banks for the spring catch. The fleet this season will be larger than usual.

ONTARIO.

Toronto.—The trade in fish is rather quiet as can be expected with the big rush of the Lenten trade over. During the last week of Lent, however, a good demand is anticipated in fish, when the trade will likely settle down to steady proportions. Fresh fish are not yet arriving in large quantities, fresh halibut at 10c per lb. selling freely. A few fresh fish are being taken in Lake Erie but are being shipped mostly to the New York market. Prices are steady, some firms shading prices on lines of frozen fish in which they find an over supply.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

St. John.—The supply of fresh fish continues very satisfactory. Last week gaspereaux caught at Lorneville made their appearance and were sold by the fishermen at $3 per 100. For some weeks past, a large quantity of these fish have been taken through the ice on the St. John river, but the warm weather now makes it rather dangerous work.

BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Vancouver.—Halibut has been arriving only in small quantities during the last few days. The Manhattan brought in 70,000 pounds and was followed by the New England with 80,000 pounds. The Kingfisher's load was 120,000 pounds, while the Celestial Empire had a fair cargo.

There promises to be greater activity in the fishing industry in British Columbia. A Vancouver company is establishing a salmon cannery on Seymour inlet; another Fisheries Company is building a cannery and cold storage plant at Quatsino on the west coast of Vancouver Island; a fishing industry is projected at Kyuquot Sound, and a cold storage plant is to be established in connection with a cannery at Uchucklesit on Barclay Sound.

Preparations are being made for the season's salmon pack. Traps on the southern coast of Vancouver Island are being got ready. Two fish-curiog plants will be operated at Victoria, the output being sent to European markets.

NEWFOUNDLAND.

St. Johns.—There has been no change in the fish market here. Trade is at present not brisk. The seal fishing steamers are out and reports received by wireless are not as good as those for the same time last year, but correct results will not be known until the steamers arrive. They are expected in a few days. Salmon, which advanced to $6.50 per case one month ago, still holds steady at that quotation. Prices ruling now are:

FOR THE LAST OF THE FISH.

Hints for Dealers in Regard to Passing of Lent.

As the Lenten season draws to a close the dealer will do well to consider the reduction of his fish stocks, that the end of the season will not find him with large supplies on hand. Sometimes, at the end of the season, pickled and salt fish hang on for a long time. The merchant should try to get his stock reduced to reasonable limits before the demand begins to fail.

If a barrel of fish is partly used do not allow the few to lie there in the bottom of the keg, covered with brine. It doesn't look good. Take some out, spreading in a conspicuous place, with a price card attached. If they are not sold at night, replace them in a barrel and next day display two others, so that none of the stock will be damaged by exposure to the air.

Care should be taken that barrel-fish be kept well covered with brine or they will become dry and rusty. But, in covering do not pour the water in the barrel but mix first in a separate dish and see that it is the right strength before pouring over the fish.

EXTERMINATE THE HOUSE FLY.

Time When Merchant Should Take Active Measures Approaching.

Now is the time for the grocer to start in his war against that great summer pest of the grocery store—the fly.

As the weather grows warmer it will begin to make it's presence known and the grocer should start right away on his campaign of total extermination.

It has been declared by scientists that more benefit is derived by the public from the death of one fly in April than from the extermination of 100 in July. The reason is that the amount of damage caused between April and July is greater than can be atoned for by the most watchful care during the remaining part of the season. The house fly is also a terrific breeder as is denoted by the tremendous increase in numbers during the summer, and the death of 100 in the early part of the season would mean a big decrease in the ultimate season's swarms.

The chief source of attraction and also the largest breeding ground for the fly is to be found in the deposits of filth allowed to accumulate in or near the house or store. The merchant should therefore put his place in order so that it will have no attraction for this great enemy of all grocery stores; he should remember that the best way to prevent multiplication is to kill as many as possible, early.

GOOD FRIDAY

A Fish Advertisement

Many associations come to our mind with this holiday—the first holiday of Spring. Really, it is the only holiday that ranks with Christmas in that it is observed by everybody and has its special outstanding features of pleasure, religion and commercialism.

We have our own particular ways of observing the first two features, but as business men our attention is focussed on the commercial features. Seasonable goods are the Bread and Butter of business. And through time-honored custom, everbody, as far as articles of diet go, associates eggs for Easter and Fish for Good Friday. Somebody is going to supply these demands, but are you going to get your share? Now with the fish demand, Mr. Grocer, it is of vital importance that you place your orders where Quality is considered first.

Because, Mr. Grocer, if you dared to send a bad fish to your customer your business at large and your reputation both suffer. Now we come in. We don't claim to have the lowest prices. Certainly not. Because, don't you see, where value lowers, price always follows suit. And where price is lowered it is well worth investigation as to quality. And always keep in mind that "Quality is Remembered long after price is forgotten."

Our prices are always compatible with the quality given and we are looking to supply an enormous Good Friday trade from a progressive and up-to-date retail trade.

HINTS FOR GROCERS.

The man who uses his memory as an order book will find customer often asking for goods which are "just sold out." A "want" book can be placed in a handy spot and articles that are getting short noted with little trouble.

It is all right to cater to the "high class trade," but always be on the look out for the working man.

See that the farmers get prompt service when they stop in front of your store. It is the way to bring him back.

Buy goods in such a quantity that you will be able to sell them within a reasonable time. Do not buy goods for which there is "going to be a demand" unless you are prepared to push the line hard yourself. Demand, in but few cases, grows in itself.

A much more attractive arrangement can be made if more care is taken in placing goods on the shelves. See that shelves and stock match, and that long goods are not placed on short shelves and short goods on long shelves.

Stand at the entrance to your store, and cast your eye about. See if appearances are such as would attract you, a customer, entering the store.

The High Reputation The Canadian Grocer has attained in the Past is making itself felt among Non-Subscribers more than ever.

Proof of this lies in our weekly reports of new subscribers. Last week another record was reached when we added 59 new readers to The Grocer.

And these dealers are good dealers. They are men who have the power to create demand. They are therefore desirable men to interest; The Canadian Grocer has quality in its circulation.

"We like The Grocer very much," write Hadlock Bros., Barnston, Que., "and could not place $2.00 to any better advantage."

Just another proof that The Canadian Grocer is a profitable investment.

THERE are very few articles that look more alike than two cakes of laundry soap. The wrappers, the shape, the size and even the weight of each may be the same, and when you look at them together you wonder why one sells well and the other doesn't. Same way with men. You see a man who has made a million and has the confidence of the whole country, and in most ways he looks as much like the ordinary individual as two cakes of soap. But you've got to cut his head open to see where the difference lies, and you've got to put SURPRISE in the wash tub to see why it holds its present place among Canadian consumers. Once you do this the whole thing is clear to your mind; for while it looks like other soap, the distinction is in the QUALITY.

Macaroni Vermicelli Spaghetti

The peculiarly desirable qualities of Taganrog (Russia) wheat impart to the Macaroni, Vermicelli, Spaghetti and fancy pastes made by Codou of France, a delicacy and flavor unlike any others—the quality is superb.

Added to that is the dependency of expert workmanship furthered by the aid of a model factory. With the definite purpose of securing the "BEST" insist upon having "Codou's."

Look for the Name "CODOU"

on the package—it assures and guarantees satisfaction. It is the stamp of reliability—the seal of goodness—the real and genuine. With it in your stock you are certain to avoid complaints. "Codou" that is the name to think of.

THE NAME "FAIRBANK" MEANS SOAP SURETY

GOLD DUST is sold before you stock it, because your customers know what it will do and every one of them has read our slogan

"Let the Gold Dust Twins do your work"

GOLD DUST sells itself—you don't have to "talk it up," we DO THAT in our advertising and the thousands of women who USE it TALK FOR IT, too. You can sell a customer her GOLD DUST and six other articles in the time it would take to tell her about some other washing powder, and she'll always buy GOLD DUST and be pleased with it. Don't talk yourself into trouble by "pushing" powders that have no standing—just SELL GOLD DUST.

Successful Merchants Put a Receipt in Every Parcel

Why Don't You?

National Cash Registers afford the quickest and safest known method of recording every sale and of automatically issuing a printed receipt. Each receipt is consecutively numbered and dated, shows the amount of the transaction and clerk's initials. Duplicate record is kept inside the machine where only the proprietor can get at it. You need this protection. Why keep on "trying to get along without it"? Write for booklets and price list.

IN CASE OF FIRE

would your accounts be protected, or would they burn as common ordinary merchandise? Your records are the most valuable assets you have and if they are burned you will know how it feels to have cold sweats at night.

The KEITH System

will protect your accounts against fire without costing you one cent.

Pretty broad statement, but it's so, because your brother merchants all over the country tell us it works out the few dollars you put into it in the beginning several times over in the course of one year.

On account of that numbering feature it's a regular watch dog against leaks. It's simple, too—all done with one writing.

Wholesale Groceries, Wines and Liquors

Montreal

Most any one can sell a customer any kind of a Tea "once." But no one can possibly sell this self-same customer continuously, unless giving the best possible uniform value for the price charged, which of course means "SALADA." Not because we are egotistical enough to think so, but because the success of our 19 years' experience on these lines has proven it so, yes, and beyond all debate.

The Annual Sale Now Exceeds 23 Million Packets--and Still Growing.

This is rather small type, but well worth reading.

You take no risk in handling "SALADA," because we definitely guarantee the sale of every case you purchase from us, and will, at any time, exchange or refund the invoice cost on any "SALADA" you may desire to return to us. No "Buts" or "Ifs." We will pay on demand, and also be responsible for return freight charges. —Where is there another firm with the courage to duplicate this offer ?

A Peculiar Situation in Brockville

Complications That Have Been Making a Web of Difficulties for Two Grocers, Differing Over the Rent of a Store for One Month — Circumstances Which Seem to Have Placed One of Dealers in Position Where Competitor Can Assess Heavy Charges—Two Experts Answer the Problem.

How much is the occupancy of a store worth for a month ?

"Why just the price called for in the lease," you reply.

Yes, quite right, but how much is it worth when your competitor in business owns your store, and you have rented his, and when his lease runs out a month before yours, and he has no place to go in the town and wants to continue in business ?

"Oh ! that's a horse of an entirely different color," you say.

So it is, sure enough, and yet that is just the proposition two business men in Brockville, Ont., are worrying over at the present time, or were, when this was being written. Only this particular case has one or two features that add if anything to the complexity of it all.

The Brockville Case.

But let's to details. On the principal business street in Brockville two grocers have been competing for business for some years. Their stores are situated almost opposite to each other. The one probably has a slight advantage in size on the other, but the latter again "has it" on the former in regard to location, so the stores may fairly be deemed equal as to value. Bear with me yet a little while, for this history would be inexcusable were it not for the finish of it. About two years ago one of these grocers, William Lorimer, bought out the building in which is located the business establishment of the other, A. E. Shaver. The latter has a lease which does not expire until the middle of May next, while, Lorimer's period of occupation is due to end on the middle of this month. So there is just a month between them. Now Shaver has leased Lorimer's store and is entitled to possession in April. Lorimer still wishes to keep on in the business and there seems to be available at the moment no other store suitable to his needs. Probably the reader has begun to sense the difficulties and peculiarities of the position.

The Vexing Question.

When a representative of The Canadian Grocer called at Mr. Shaver's place some days ago, that dealer was deeply immersed in the problem. Said he: "I wish your paper would settle this thing for me, lay down some rule whereby I can estimate the amount I should be entitled to charge Mr. Lorimer in the event of giving up my store to him for this month. I know that I hold the whip hand, and although the Good Book says, in a sense, that we are to love our competitors in business, I feel that it is simply business for me to get all I am legitimately entitled to. I have been to Mr. Lorimer and have explained the position in which I find he stands, but he doesn't seem to see eye to eye with me in the matter. My rent here is $20. the same as his, and all he says he is willing to do is to indemnify me for my rent and pay me a bonus of $5, or allow me $25 in all. That I consider ridiculous." And Mr. Shaver began to unroll the scroll of the situation to try and show why he held that view.

Further Complications.

"Just listen a moment," said he. "I think this is my advantage." He reiterated the circumstances of the lease and then added : "I have a wife and daughter whom I can put in this store and keep it open until the middle of May, with them selling my goods, and I can, at the same time, take possession of Lorimer's store, stock it up and operate it myself, cornering the trade to a degree. Lorimer has no other place to go although I believe he is negotiating with another grocer in another part of the town for the purpose of securing half his floor space to hold his goods. I don't know how he is going to come out in that, but," he questioned triumphantly. "How much should I charge Lorimer ? Tell me, please, if you can solve the riddle. I consider it a nice question. It is one at least the like of which I have never felt called upon to decide before."

It surely is, as Mr. Shaver puts it, "a nice question," but like nearly all questions it can be solved. Upon Mr. Shaver's solicitation The Grocer has gone into the situation and here lays down on expert advice the law that apparently should obtain. Of course neither party need feel bound in the least degree to accept the ruling.

One Answer.

H. C. Carson, a Fellow of the Royal Statistical Society, an exclusive British organization, whose business, as the name implies, is in statistics, who is one of the expert writers on higher business questions for The Financial Post, looks upon it in this wise. Says he : "According to the circumstances you relate Mr. Shaver surely holds a strong position, and can demand from Mr. Lorimer almost any sum in reason. Of course I am assuming that he only wants to claim his just due, and not as Shylock once put it "a pound of flesh.' There are not many precedents to base a ruling upon so I will deal with it as a simple business problem.

"Now Lorimer, it appears, cannot secure possession of Shaver's establishment to continue business until one whole month after the lease of his own store expires. He has no place else to go and wishes to keep up his trade. Shaver, on the other hand, seems to be in the way to have two stores for the month if he wants them. How much is the service worth to Lorimer ?

Two Things to Consider.

"Well it seems to me two things only have to be considered. These are : the amount of profit which would accrue to Lorimer during that month were he in business, and the amount of damage Shaver could work to the future business of Lorimer did he operate both stores as he seems to be in a position to do. That's the whole situation, or so it would appear. So, to carry the problem further, Shaver would appear to be entitled to assess Lorimer the amount of his net profits of a month's business. for his moving would not interfere greatly with his trade, plus an amount for damages—dollars and cents, which Shaver could inflict upon his competitor by closing him out and running both stores.

"Not knowing the volume of Lorimer's business I cannot of course strike any amount to be paid and so I am prevented from calculating the damage which Shaver could work on Lorimer's trade during the month. If I could it probably would not be fair to do so, as that is not a matter for me to decide. Still that seems to me to be the only possible view to take of the matter owing to the complexities of the position in which the two now find themselves. Besides, there is still the ray of hope for Lorimer that he may be able to happily complete the negotiations with that other grocer Shaver speaks of, and so nullify all the advantages of Shaver's position. Did he but secure that floor space, he would have Shaver in the position where logically that gentleman could only hope to secure his month's rent, and a little more for interruption of Lorimer's trade. That would be my view on the matter" concluded Mr. Carson.

Another Answer.

The Grocer did not rest there but carried the question for still another test to W. P. Levack, of the MacLean Publishing Company, a chartered accountant, and accordingly a recognized authority on such matters of valuation ; also, of course, a disinterested party. The issue in all its aspects was laid before him, for consideration.

The answer of Mr. Levack was precisely the same as that given by Mr. Carson. He could see nothing else for it but that Lorimer could in all fairness be charged for the profits of the twelfth part of the year, and also assessed for probable injury to his business during that balancing month. "Of course," said Mr. Levack, "the offer of Lorimer to allow Shaver a bonus of but $5 for his vacating those premises, is trifling. It is, in fact, insignificant before the amount which I would feel called upon to pay, even if not with the best cheer in the world. did I but find myself in his position. It is a very nice question," he added smilingly.

So The Grocer has given the answer to the question which Mr. Shaver has asked. The entire case has been treated disinterestedly and there is in the ruling herein laid down as has been said before no thought of its being binding in the slightest upon either Mr. Shaver, or Mr. Lorimer. But it may tend to clear the air, and may also have a tendency to solve the troubles of other men in like situation. Any way Mr. Shaver has had his answer to 'what is it worth ?'

Proposes Clubs to Save the Grocer

Proposal of Canadian Retailer Who Believes Business is Going to the Dogs—How the Country Would be Divided — The Method of Securing Membership and Finances — The Armchair Fellowship Talks—Advantages to Dealer, and the Ultimate Ideal.

A club for grocers !—has a nice homey ring to it, hasn't it ? Makes you think of big soft leather chairs, and pipes and such things ; and that is precisely what it is designed to make you think of.

Discussing grocer's troubles in general with The Canadian Grocer last week, a Canadian dealer suggested this idea as the one and only means of getting retailers together in harmony for the talking over of troubles peculiar to the trade. In no other way, he said, had he hopes of ever really getting the individuals going to make up the great army of dealers throughout the country, to air their innermost troubles to sympathetic listeners of his craft so that the best results for all could be attained.

Not a Small Scheme.

His is not a small scheme, not by any means. He would have his clubs established in all the great Canadian centres. These would draw their membership from the smaller towns and cities and country districts in which they were situated. Members from the country could take a train into the selected city, drop casually into "the club," and talk shop, with other members who had "happened" in likewise for precisely the same reason as our country friend:—to get pointers, and, mayhap, advices. But let us tell of the scheme in his own enthusiastic way so that the reader may get the soul of the idea.

"In my humble opinion," began the dealer, "we never will get ahead as a body until we get a solid, harmonious membership across the whole Dominion. That, of course, is always the idea of all promoters, union and lodge dreamers. It may be only a dream now, but I've been giving the matter a great deal of thought,—have been talking it over with other dealers, and I believe it can be done, and done easily.

"Take Toronto for an example. As it is one of the greatest cities in Canada, one of the clubs would be located there. Now then, start off by issuing stock—say at $5 a share, one of which would suffice for membership—and sell as many as you can in the city, and, say, all through the western and part of northern and eastern sections of the Province of Ontario. I'm supposing that most merchants to whom the idea is explained, would take at least one share, and I'm equally certain that a great many of them would take two or more shares. I don't think you would have to hang on a guarantee of interest or promise of dividend to those shares, at least not at the outset.

The Building.

"So far, so good. There you have your membership, and a considerable supply of funds. Now, to continue. With the cash collected from the Toronto district, you can go ahead and secure your quarters. If you have not enough money to rent or construct a whole building, take part of one for a starter. Fit it up as a lounging room, board room, refreshment room, and so on, and if you have enough space fit up a few bed rooms, for the convenience of out-of-town members. But there must be no bar. I don't think the boys would call for one, and if we had one it would probably defeat the objects that called the club into being. Now," he declared triumphantly, "there you have membership, funds and building, or nucleus of one. Precisely the same plan should be followed, say in Montreal, Halifax, Winnipeg, Vancouver, Hamilton, London, and so on. That's the complete scheme.

The Best Results.

"Following out the natural order of things you would have a certain amount of enthusiasm in each of those centres, you're bound to have it because the boys are being given something for their money, and something, too, that they appreciate. Because they appreciate it they will use the rooms, and that use of the rooms is exactly what we want. Get a bunch of our fellows together, each one with a lot of trouble and ideas under his hat, and you can bet your last dollar something would happen. It's my belief that something would be in the best interest of the trade. I can see, or imagine I can, a good many cut-throat business propositions going up in tobacco smoke, and a fair trade sentiment engendered that will go a long way toward improving business conditions. People have only to secure harmony to get results.

"There now, I'm hoping you have got that picture of one club, which of course it is proposed to extend until instead of a few rooms in a building we have a structure of our own, with business quarters to let. You have heard of the fellowship idea; now let us carry it further. Supposing a traveler comes to town, telephones me and says: 'B——, I want to see you; when can you come down?' I say when, and get there—to the club. "What is it now ?" with an expressive gesture—"it's the hotel and other things. That, in my humble opinion should be sufficient to make most merchants take to the club idea instantly. It surely appeals to me.

The Profits.

"Let's sum up the profits. You have a suite of rooms where you can feel welcome every night. You can get ideas and help to aid you not a little bit in working out your own business salvation. That too, instead of a cold formal, slimly-attended meeting of tired men, once a month or so. You will have cheerful business conducted cheerfully, and you can meet the necessary travelers in pleasant surroundings. There would have to be regular officers and meetings, but that wouldn't work any hardship because it would only mean changing from one chair and one room. So much for one club. But couldn't you have a joint committee covering the whole, a government based on a plan similar to the solid-rock basis of the government of this Canada of ours, with each club enjoying its own autonomy but sometimes the big "Boss" stepping in with a word or two for the general good of the order. Now, there's the scheme, what will they do with it ?" he finished.

What is the trade going to do with it?

Word was received by telegraph from our Winnipeg office, just at press time, that the Dow Cereal and Milling Company's plant at Pilot Mound, Manitoba, had been destroyed by fire. Nicholson & Bain are shareholders, and act as their agents in Winnipeg, and at other centres in the West. The loss is estimated at $70,000.

Profit Figured on Capital Employed

Views of St. Catharines Reader on Recent Article Dealing With Figuring Profits—Admits Dealers are Losing Thousands and Thousands of Dollars Through Inability to Reckon Profits on Sales, but Contends Mr. Johnson's Views are Wrong—Correspondent Right and Wrong—An Interesting Controversy.

By Henry Johnson, Jr.

I copy below an article from the St. Catharines Standard which indicates that one man radically differs from me in relation to figuring profits. Others have differed from me in this; but, in the vernacular, they have not been "very much." This gentleman, however, is "a foeman worthy of my steel" in that he knows a good deal of his subject. It delights me to read his communication because I am sure we shall all get something out of this discussion.

Both Right and Wrong.

Mr. Jamieson is right and wrong. He is strictly right as a mathematician and as a lexicographer. But text books and dictionaries are ever and always behind human development—naturally must be, since the one records the development of knowledge and the other the evolution of language. Turn to "kodak," for example; and study the history of "quiz." Then go still further and try to imagine what future dictionarians will say re the history and meaning of the verb "(to) queer." Arithmetic properly deals with practical problems and such problems are different as the requirements of humanity differ from period to period. "Figuring" such as fulfilled all requirements of retailers of two generations back cannot do for us to-day because conditions have changed and our needs must be served by better methods.

The Point in Dispute.

But the demonstration of all this will take too much space this week, so I shall only insert the specific problem to which Mr. Jamieson refers, so you may have all the points before you. Here it is—copied from page 30 of our issue of March 10:

> "Take the figuring of profits, for instance. The text books used in our schools certainly were never written by successful men of business. If they were they would never contain such examples as the following: 'A man buys a horse for $50 and sells him for $75, what percentage of profit does he make? Answer 50 per cent.' You will find in every arithmetic such examples. No more fatal and misleading ones were ever penned. They lead the student to think of the percentage of profit in an entirely false manner and cause many business men to think they are making much larger profits than they really are. This makes them prodigal of expense and often leads to a failure which with a better knowledge of percentage could have been avoided."

"Suppose a man to have in contemplation the sale of a horse on the basis of the above transaction. A broker approaches him and offers to conduct the negotiation. He asks a commission of 33 1-3 per cent.

"Now, the owner of the horse, having a profit of 50 per cent. in sight, agrees to this, and the broker, having completed the transaction, renders a bill as follows:

Sold one horse	$75.00
Commission, 33 1-3 p.c.	25.00
Due seller	$50.00

"The seller's books would show a profit of 50 per cent. entirely eaten up by a commission of 33 1-3 per cent. Not good figuring, is it? Still that is the way nine-tenths of our smaller merchants figure which fact often accounts for their being small.

"Now, there is only one way to figure a merchandise profit, and that is on the sale, not the purchase. Find out what percentage of the sale is profit; govern yourself accordingly, and you will not go astray. Had the seller of the horse followed this rule, he would have found his profit to be 33 1-3 per cent., and would not have made the mistake of giving it all to the broker.

"There is a great mistake made in ever considering the profit as made on the investment or on the cost of an article. Some teachers dispute this statement, but let them ask any successful wholesale merchant what he thinks, and see that he will say. Most of them hold that figuring that way precludes success."

Here is Mr. Jamieson's criticism:

"Figure always from the selling end." The above article in The Canadian Grocer of March 10 was shown to me, and my opinion asked thereon.

To my mind, the attitude of the writer is entirely wrong. It is quite true, as he says, that many business men are losing hundreds and thousands of dollars without knowing it, on account of misconception on their part of the proper method of figuring the percentage of profit. It is not true, however, that they suffer this loss because they do not figure the profits on the sales. The trend of the article may be gleaned from the following example given by the writer. He says that if a man sells for $6 an article which cost him $5, he is making a gain of one sixth, or 16 2-3 per cent.

Defining Profit.

Chambers' Dictionary defines profit as the gain arising from the employment of capital. Therefore, if I had a house that cost me $4,000, and I sold it for $5,000, I have gained $1,000 on an employment of $4,000 capital. That is, I have gained 25 per cent. By the method described in The Canadian Grocer, I would affirm that I had gained $1,000 on a sale of $5,000, or that I had gained 20 per cent. Now, even at the moment of selling my total capital employed was only $4,000, and it was only through a profit of $1,000 on my original capital that I increased my capital to $5,000. It is beyond my comprehension that a business man should make the assertion that my capital employed in working up and consummating this sale was $5,000. If it were I have not increased my capital one dollar by the sale, and am in no better position than before.

Profit is Only Profit.

Thus a profit of 25 per cent., for instance, cannot under any circumstances means anything else than a profit of 25 per cent. on the value invested. In the case of the horse with cash value of $50, sold for $75, the owner of the horse invested $50, on which investment he would receive a dividend of $25, supposing he had sold the horse himself. The broker, on the other hand, puts through a transaction valued at $75, on which investment made by the new owner, he charges a commission of 33 1-3 per cent., amounting to $25. It stands to reason that the point of view of the owner of the horse and that of the broker must be different. The owner pays $25 out of the cost value of the horse to have him sold. That is, he pays 50 per cent. commission to make a gain of 50 per cent. which nets him merely the cost price. Since he has engaged the broker to sell the horse for him, he has at no time, even theoretically, been entitled to the $75, and hence he could not by any process of mathematical reasoning come to the conclusion that he was paying 25 seventy-fifths or 33 1-3 per cent. commission.

Another View.

Supposing that instead of the owner engaging the broker to sell the horse, the new owner had paid the broker $25 for effecting the purchase. The latter would then be employing a capital of $75 in the purchase, and hence he gives the broker 25 seventy-fifths, or 33 1-3 commission. His point of view, however, is entirely different from that of the first owner.

Again, suppose a man buys a share of stock of the intrinsic value of $100. He, however, pays $110 for the share. He afterwards sells the stock so as to gain 10 per cent. According to the method advocated by Mr. Johnson, he must sell the share for $122.22. In other words, on an investment of $110 he receives a premium of $12.22, or by investing $100 in similar stock, he receives a premium or profit of $11.11. By what stretch of imagination can a profit of $11.11 on an investment of $100 be considered a gain of 10 per cent.? The whole principle enunciated by Mr. Johnson is a contradiction of the essentials of cost accounting.

Wrong and Right.

Some merchants say, "Yes, but we always find our expenses for rent, fuel, light, etc., as certain percentages of our sales, and would it not therefore be correct to figure our profits also on the basis of our sales?" Our answer to this is that two wrongs do not make a right. It is all very well for the merchant to figure out what percentage of the sales is spent for rent, if he wishes to find what proportion the rent is of the total amount received over the counter—that is, of the volume of business transacted, but this is merely a problem which probably excites the curiosity of the merchant. If he wants to find out the true percentage spent for rent he must of necessity figure it out on the basis of the value put into the business—that is, on the cost of the goods.

Is End Justified?

The fact that the merchant may reckon his expenses on the basis of his sales, which has been shown to be an incorrect method, does not justify his second error in reckoning his profits also on the basis of the sales.

The gist of the whole article in the magazine appears to be that if the merchant has not a proper education in the subject of percentage, he should adopt an incorrect method which is simpler, and which by his using it in a mechanical way, may save him from a loss which he might have sustained owing to his lack of knowledge of percentage. In other words, we return to the old question, "Does the end justify the means?" Would it not be better for the merchant to take a few private lessons, or in some other way acquire a correct understanding of the subject of percentages and profits and in this way accustom himself to the point of view of his broker as well as to his own, keeping in mind, in every instance, that the profit made by any individual must be reckoned on the capital employed in the particular transaction by that individual.

London Dealers Want Another Big Trade Week in May

London Ont., April 13.—Trade-in-London week, the first of its kind, is past and the results, reported at a meeting of the London Retailers' Association on Monday night are so distinctly encouraging that it was at once decided to hold another. The date was fixed as May 3 to 8.

Rainy weather prevailed nearly all last week, and undoubtedly kept from the city hundreds of people who had planned to make purchases here. In spite of this, the merchants interested, embracing many branches of trade, express themselves as well satisfied and anxious to see another trade-in-London week held.

"There is no doubt that it brought in a lot of business," said H. A. Kompass, secretary of the association, to The Canadian Grocer. "One thing sure, we will not be able to arrive at the amount, for the reason that many people secured receipts for just enough of their purchases to get the railway fare refund, and after that did not trouble with them. It is significant that many people asked when the next Trade-in-London week was to be."

The method of refunding, Mr. Kompass stated, worked out well. Customers secured from the merchants receipts for the amount of the purchases. For a total of $20 or more, railway fare up to 65 miles was refunded in cash by a clerk in the Home Bank, on presentation of the return half of the customer's railway ticket. To customers from a distance of more than 65 miles, return railway fare for 65 miles was allowed. The refund office was open from 9 a.m. to 6.30 p.m.

The preservation of the receipts made it easy, of course, to divide the expense among the members, so that those benefiting little paid out but a small share of the refund money.

The visitors last week came from all over the Western Ontario peninsula—Brantford, Guelph, Walkerville, Chatham, Ridgetown, Sarnia and Wingham. In all, 89 places were represented by buyers.

Besides arranging for the next Trade-in-London week, the association has determined to offer cash prizes to those making the largest purchases, in addition to the refund above referred to. The idea of this is to induce those coming to record all that they buy, and enable the members of the association to see the exact amount of new business.

Stock Taking: The Business Man's X-Ray

How the Dealer Can Take Thought to Himself and Discover How Every Department of His Establishment is Working in Regard to Returns—Necessity of Profit on Everything Sold—Ottawa Merchant Gives Experience.

By J. W. Bryans.

One of the essentials of an up-to-date grocery store is frequent stock taking, for by no other means can a merchant properly tell whether he is making or losing money. He should know whether he is making a fair profit, not only on the business in general, but in every department and article which is sold, and a careful watch has to be kept on the business to assure this.

Merchants are gradually adopting methods by which they are able to tell exactly the standing of their business, but there still are many who if asked the money they made last year, would be as astonished as if you had asked them how many grains of granulated sugar they had sold or some equally odd question.

Some Things to Know.

There are dealers who know little about some things upon which the success of the business to a large extent depends, and who drag along from year to year, possibly getting a living, and a little more. They are making but little interest on the capital invested, if any, and allot themselves no salary for their work. They do not know how much money they have tied up in their business, the amount of their expenses, the amount they owe, or are owed, or any of those things that are essential to modern merchandising.

Such a dealer should frequently take stock that he may know exactly where he stands. Only in this way can he keep tab on his business and secure a fair profit. Thus he ascertains the amount of his resources over liabilities, and when next he goes over the stock he knows the increase in resources over liabilities. Knowing the value of the sales for the year, he knows whether he has received a fair profit or not. If he has not there is something wrong, which ought to be adjusted at once. Expenses are too high or there is some leak in the business that is eating up the profit. Unless he takes stock he will not know whether he is making a profit or not, and therefore will not find the cause of loss. It is not worth while to engage in business for a simple living. There is no incentive to grow unless the outlook is for better things and for an improvement in financial conditions.

Get Down to Departments.

Not only should he know whether the whole business is paying but he also should know the facts in connection with each department. Is he securing a fair profit from his meat, and from his fruit? Does he know whether he is or not? If he does not, it will be to his benefit to find out. In this regard, an Ottawa merchant recently had the following to say:—

"Although an annual stock-taking is necessary in order that the merchant can accurately ascertain how his business stands, it does not show whether all departments are paying a profit.

"Once in a while I keep account of some particular department of my store to find if it is paying the profits that it should. To do this I first take stock of that particular department, keep account of all goods added as well as all sales made. In a month's time I take stock again and can tell whether this department has been paying a profit and how much.

"This can be done without very much trouble and a merchant need only do it for two weeks if he wishes as that will give him a good idea of how matters are going.

"Last year I kept account of my meat department and found that it was barely paying a profit. After a careful examination as to the reason for this, I changed my method of keeping meats so that they would not dry out while in stock and also installed a meat slicer and when I again looked into this department I found it was paying me a good profit."

Be Sure of Profit.

This necessity of looking sharp after profits cannot be urged too strongly on the merchant, for it is necessary, in a successful business, to obtain a fair profit on everything sold. With every article he sells he should be convinced that he is making money. How much profit did he make on that last cheese he sold? Did he make a profit at all or did he lose money on it? He bought it at 13½ cents per pound. There was 84 pounds in it or at least that is the amount that was charged to him. Did he weigh it to find out? That is the first step. Suppose he did not and sold it at 15 cents per pound. He would figure that he made 1½ cents per pound or $1.26 on the whole cheese, while likely he sold at a loss. A cheese cannot easily be cut up and the original weight secured. If you take a whole cheese and cut it into only ten pieces, there will be a certain amount of loss and how much larger the loss must be when the 84-pound circle is cut into pound and half pound pieces.

Jobbers Interested in Price Decision

Judgment of Supreme Court Restraining Medicine Concern From Fixing Prices, to Consumer, Regarded in Grocery Circles in New York as Highly Significant—Some Look for Reduction in Prices—History of Case.

New York, April 13.—Local wholesale grocers and manufactarers are deeply interested in the decision handed down last week by the Supreme Court of the United States in the suit instituted by the Dr. Miles Medical Company against John D. Park & Sons Company.

Primarily calculated as referring to the drug trade, the decision, according to big wholesalers here, will be even more far-reaching in effect upon the grocery business. Breakfast foods, soaps and kindred articles are mentioned, and it would appear that the big jobbers regard this case in the light of a test between manufacturer and distributor, no matter what the class of goods concerned. They say that as the manufacturers of the goods is restrained from setting the price at which the article must go to the consumer, lower prices will be the result, contending that one cause of the high cost of living was to be attributed to this action by the maker in setting the price to the consumer.

Wholesaler Speaks.

Harry Balfe, of Austin Nichols, stated he was much pleased with the decision and that it meant a great victory for his and other firms who had been fighting the specialty manufacturers for years. "Grocers," said he, "are going to derive great benefit from this decree, because it holds void all contracts made by manufacturers restricting the sale of their goods at specified prices."

The drug men think that the effects of the decision will not be particularly terrible in their case. As most of the patent medicine firms no longer compel the distribution of their goods at set prices.

History of the Cases.

The Miles-Park suit commenced with a proceeding instituted by a patent medicine concern. Senator Root was in the beginning retained as couosel for Park, but upon his elevation to cabinet rank, Judge Alton B. Parker was retained in his place. This to show the importance in which the issue was held.

On January 22, 1907, the case came up for argument before the United States Circuit Court of Appeals at Cincinnati, Justice Lurton presiding. The oral argument submitted by Judge Parker, as well as the brief, rested the defense on the ground that the contracts described in the complaint, by which the manufacturer attempted to control the prices of his product, not only in the hands of the wholesaler, but in those of the retailer, and finally fix the price which should be paid by the consumer, constituted a combination to restrain trade and prevent competition, and were, therefore, void.

The position was fully sustained by the court in an interesting opinion written by Judge Lurton.

The case was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, but counsel for Hartmann, as well as for the Druggists' Association, reached the conclusion that a system of "consignment contracts" could be devised which, while accomplishing the same result, would, nevertheless, have apparent support in authority. So counsel for Hartmann moved to dismiss its own appeal in the Supreme Court of the United States and brought an action for the Dr. Miles Medical Company based on modified contracts. The demurrer interposed was sustained in the lower court and again in the Circuit Court of Appeals, Sixth District, and was argued in the Supreme Court on the 5th and 6th of January of this year, Justice Hughes handing down the majority opinion on Monday.

HAMILTON RETAILERS ANGRY.

Hamilton, April 13.—At the last meeting of the Retail Grocers' Association there was a lively discussion as to the legality of fines recently imposed by the magistrate upon certail retail grocers for driving on the wrong side of the street. J. O. Carpenter thought he had not received justice in his case, and J. A. McIntosh declared that some who were enforcing the law never drove a horse and so were not capable of judging whether the law was being observed or not. It was proposed at first to send a deputation to the next council to protest, but later on it was decided to consult a solicitor on the matter.

It was decided to hold a picnic again this year, but the time and place were left in the hands of the executive committee to decide. The executive committee is to report to the association at its next meeting. The picnic committees were appointed so that they might start right in with their work. The following are the committees appointed and their chairmen: Transportation, J. O. Carpenter; refreshments, A. G. Bain; entertainment, J. A. McIntosh; games, John Forth; printing, W. Smye.

Five new grocers were received as new members into the association, and John Forth was elected to the executive to fill the vacancy made by the retirement of Mr. Almas.

EATON'S FOR CALGARY.

Calgary, Apr. 13.—Business circles here were startled considerably when the announcement was made a few days ago, that the T. Eaton Company, Limited, of Toronto and Winnipeg, would establish a large catalogue store in this city. Parties deemed reliable are responsible for the information and so the story is regarded as true.

WHOLESALERS AMALGAMATE.

Sudbury Firm Purchases Control of Davidson & Hay.

Toronto, Apr. 13.—The announcement of the amalgamation of two important interests in the wholesale grocery trade of Ontario is made this week. It is the purchase of the capital stock of the Davidson & Hay, Limited, Toronto, by the interests controlling the Young Company, Limited, of North Bay and Sudbury. These two businesses, according to the men interested, are brought together for reasons of mutual betterment and the geographical advantages of distributing locations.

It is stated that the management of the respective branches of the company will continue in the hands of its present officers, and that the business of the Davidson & Hay, Limited, will continue to be operated under that name.

Editor, Canadian Grocer.—Can you give me some method of removing paint from glass without scraping or destroying the surface of the glass?

"GROCER."

Brandon, Man., April 8.

Editorial Note—The appearance of many windows has been destroyed by people attempting to remove paint the wrong way. The following methods will allow of its being done without damage to the glass:

To clean old signwork off stationary glass, such as fixed panes in windows, doors, etc., mix and boil a thin paste of ordinary flour. Then add to this concentrated lye, sufficient to make it good and strong. This will form a solution of the consistency of ordinary paste. Apply and remove several coatings, allowing about a quarter of an hour between applications, scrape off with a wall scraper or ordinary putty knife. Then sponge it, and rub with whitening and water. When this is sponged off, chamois and polish with a piece of clean cheese cloth or tissue paper. If the glass is unmounted, provide a bath of strong lye solution in some suitable receptacle. Allow the glass to stand in this solution until the paint is destroyed when removed rinse in clear water and wipe dry with sawdust. Rub with diluted ammonia and whitening, dry again with sawdust, and finish by polishing the same as directed in the first process given above.

Editor, Canadian Grocer.

Could you give me an inexpensive method of displaying dried fruits, so that they will not dry out?

"CANADIAN DEALER."

Saskatoon, April 7, 1911.

Answer—Canadian Dealer brings out a question which is of interest to most dealers, the display of dried fruits. When they are shown in the original container, the top, exposed to the air, dries out considerably causing a certain loss in weight and spoiling the appearance of the fruit. Of course the drying out may be eliminated by placing in show cases. All grocers can not afford this for their dried fruits but many dealers have glass covers for the dried fruit boxes, which keep the fruit from drying and also excludes the dust, impressing customers with the cleanliness with which the store is conducted. These covers are made so they may be fastened on any box of the same size.

A DROP IN FLOUR.

Montreal and Toronto mills announce this week a reduction of thirty cents a barrel in the price of all grades of flour.

This drop was not unexpected, for the reason that trade in this line has not been overly brisk for some time. It is said to be calculated to improve conditions, and may work to that end.

Some millers say the reason for the cut is to be found in the rail and water rate from the West, which is to go into effect soon. Others say the weak wheat market of several weeks past was the moving cause. But whatever the cause, it is probable the reduction will have the effect of inducing a considerable volume of business.

SAMPLING AND ADVERTISING.

One of the greatest authorities on publicity in the United States made the statement recently that it cost five cents a family to a wholesaler to sample a town, and that if Chicago be taken as the example the equivalent in expense would have given the advertiser in question twenty-two full pages, in all the newspapers of that city.

Maybe he was wrong on his figures but it doesn't appear likely, for the aforesaid reason that he was one of the country's greatest experts in the business. But even if his estimate was out just a little, isn't there food for thought there for every dealer? Just think of it,—five cents a family!

How many times when putting an ad. in the local newspaper, do you upbraid yourself for the extravagance, thinking, without thought, that it is the most expensive way of getting your name before the public? It seems after all, as if it were not the most expensive method, by a big margin, doesn't it.

Sit down and ponder, some evening, on the benefits to be derived from the sampling of Chicago, and the using of twenty-two full newspaper pages in every paper respectively. It seems to us you wouldn't have to think long, before you came to the conclusion that the advertising, reaching practically the entire population of the State of Illinois, would be by far the most beneficial to the firm concerned. Of coure it would! People are reading advertisements to-day. But they should be well written and changed often.

EARLY CLOSING IN ST. THOMAS.

Apparently the wave of early closing which has been sweeping over parts of the west has reached Ontario, it being reported that some of the retailers of St. Thomas desire to close up their places of business a little earlier than they have been accustomed to in the past.

Last week, a petition signed by twenty-five of their number was presented to the city council, asking that a by-law to give the necessary authority, be passed. They asked to have the stores closed by 7 o'clock, on all evenings save Wednesday and Saturday in each week, on days preceding holidays and during December. The council referred the matter to a committee for a report.

It is significant that the name of not a single grocer is included among those on the petition.

VALUE OF THE SMILE.

Not all of us appreciate the commercial value of a smile. It is much greater than some of us think.

On the other hand, not all of us appreciate the commercial loss of a grouchy disposition. It also is much greater than some of us think.

No matter what the cause, it does not pay to be always growling, even if it be only at the clerks. A customer has not the key to your life and so does not know just whether you were justified or not. She only thinks, and says: "My, what a man—always looking for trouble!" and gives your store a wide berth whenever she can.

But look at the man who deals in laughter and good-nature. People are glad to frequent his establishment, because he makes them feel the better for it. There is no atmosphere of blue dejection, as in the case of the grouch. Everything looks as if the rain never came, nor the storms. It is a real difference that can be felt and good nature is the asset deciding the balance in favor of the man with the laugh.

It was old Doctor Johnston who once exclaimed testily: "Look up my man, look up; you only see mud when you look down, and growl!"

APRIL FOOLS.

On April First morning many a little chap was smarting under a keen sense of injury because some one IN A POSITION TO KNOW BETTER, had greeted him with the saluation "April Fool," upon his returning from some fruitless quest at their behest.

There is an object lesson in that, for every merchant. Let him beware that a reputation for FOOLING be not earned by him. Let him take thought to himself and to his methods, and ascertain of a surety that nothing he is doing is calculated to deceive.

Probably the most fruitful source of trouble will be the advertisement. You have not the slightest right to say things that are not true in the columns of the newspaper. It is no excuse for you to say: "Oh, well, I didn't say it; they can't hold me responsible." But you did say it; and they do hold you responsible. Even if the editor, or some one connected with the paper wrote part of your advertisement you are the one responsible for its wording. If a woman buys something in you store that had been misrepresented, she wouldn't think of the editor of the paper at all; and it wouldn't do you any good to think of him either.

Don't, Mr. Dealer, be an APRIL FOOL this year or any of those to come.

The Militia Department has decided that the annual training camp for Western Ontario shall be transferred from London to Goderich, the country town of Huron, and London dealers do not seem to take kindly to the change. There seems to be cause for indignation, as writers have calculated that it means a loss of $400,000 to the Forest City.

KIND WORDS FROM ST. JOHN.

V. J. Brown, our general circulation representative in New Brunswick, writing from St. John, under date of April 9th, quotes W. A. Simonds, wholesale grocer, as saying: "I consider The Grocer a necessity in my business. By following The Grocer's line of argument on the sugar market I bought at exactly the right time. I am agent in St. John for C.C.C. Sardines and got this through The Grocer also."

The editor of The Grocer appreciates the compliment Mr. Simonds pays to The Grocer, but would like to impress on readers of this paper that our policy is not to advise them when to buy or sell, but rather to give them facts and conditions and allow them to judge for themselves.

Montreal, April 13.—Business has been saved from a touch of quietness by the new business of the Easter season. Wholesalers are inclined to look philosophically at the slightly easier feeling now apparent. The new year up to the present has been in advance of other years, according to the general report, and because of the breaking up of the roads and for other reasons the temporary lull is not altogether unexpected. Easter, and the season following it, brings a great deal of new business and is considered one of the best to the trade.

One of the advances noted this week is in olive oil. The increase is from five to ten per cent above the former quotations. From the reports received this advance is not much of a surprise.

In dried fruits the situation grows stronger as the supplies become lighter. The price remains firm or firmer because of the shortened supplies, not because the demand is so keen. Prunes are in short compass and with several other lines, are not carried by a number of local wholesalers. When the price prevents the retailer selling at two lbs. for twenty-five cents, it is held that this is too dear and the houses referred to emphatically state that they are out, if not entirely so, at least to a considerable extent.

The market is not particularly interesting, owing to the breaks in the usual routine, and the holiday spirit that is universal.

Syrups and Molasses.—Market is practically unchanged. Syrups have received a heavy demand and a good trade has been passing in molasses. The future requirements have not yet been met hence a partial explanation for the present business.

Maple syrup is more plentiful this week and is being rather freely offered. The average of the quotations ranges from $1.10 to $1.25 per gal., with new maple sugar at from 13 to 14 cents a pound. Weather conditions have improved and reports state that the run of sap has been more copious. The demand is good.

Sugar.—The local market is steady under practically unchanged conditions. The principal feature at present is the fact that buyers are off the market, the business now going over being rather light. Dried Fruits.—The holdings of prunes among the wholesale grocery firms are, according to report, extremely light. A reason given for this attitude towards the dried fruit market is that both prunes and evaporated apples may be termed the poor man's fruit. As a general rule people of means are not heavy buyers. Hence when the price reaches such a figure that either of these fruits cannot be profitably sold at two pounds for twenty-five cents, then according to the views of one house, it is time to let them alone. It is said that at the present quotations the demand is light. Supplies are limited, thus combining conditions that tend toward a light trade. It is generally reported that evaporated peaches are up this week. They have been firm all along, strengthening as evaporated apples decreased in quantity. Some of the lines of prunes that are exceptionally scarce are, 50 to 60's, 70 to 80's, 80 to 90's and 90 to 100's. The 100's and over are likewise short in some of the local firms.

Nuts.—There have been several changes reported among the local wholesale houses in regard to nuts. Shelled walnuts are generally quoted at lower prices than have been prevailing. Tarragona almonds are slightly higher. Grenobles are a little firmer and one line of peanuts is easier. The break in shelled walnuts is believed to be the result of holding supplies at a high price, so that people refused to buy and demand was curtailed. That is one view and may be the correct. As to Brazils they seem to be exceedingly scarce and are not expected to arrive for some time. Demand for nuts is quite normal and while supplies may have warranted the high prices that have been prevailing it is rather freely held by some that the demand of late has not been sufficient to hold them at the figures to which they had attained.

Rice and Tapioca.—The latest reports in regard to tapioca indicate pasitions of strength. Two weeks ago on eof the local houses reported a decline in medium pearl, but others fail to see how such a step could have been warranted. This market has shown but little variation in a long time and even now continues to show the strength that has thus far maintained it.

CANNED GOODS

Montreal.—The market has not changed materially. Canned apples are dwindling in number, but not in price. In fact, in that regard they are moving the other way. There has been a somewhat better feeling in practically all lines of canned goods in anticipation of a good Easter trade. The quotations for future canned lobster for June and July delivery are being quoted and are marked rather high as was really expected in view of the crop scarcity.

Toronto.—Trade continues normal with dealers operating on a hand-to-mouth basis. Some firms report an improvement in the movement of canned fruits but it is not very marked. Singapore pineapples are firm at prices ranging from $1.50 to $1.65 for 1½'s. They have also soared in the general upward tendency in canned goods in the past year. One dealer quoted Hawaiian at $2.35 for 2s, which he stated was an advance of about 20 per cent. over prices ruling a year ago.

ONTARIO MARKETS

POINTERS—

Beans.—Slightly easier.

Evaporated Apples.—High and scarce.

Canned Pineapples.—Firm.

Toronto, April 13.—A steady trade is being done in groceries on this market, although it shows little improvement over last week. The Easter season has been responsible for more activity in some lines, but it has not increased the total volume of business to any extent. After Easter the trade will likely swing back into regular channels, and with the added attention which dealers will give housecleaning articles after Easter, wholesalers are looking forward to a good spring trade.

The opening of navigation will also mean an increase in business to local dealers through that source.

The situation in sugar is about the same as a week ago. The last grinding of the Cuban crop has commenced and news of the probable output is awaited by the trade. Locally the trade is quiet as retail dealers are well stocked for the moment.

The supply of evaporated apples is extremely short, and 15 cents per pound is asked by holders. At this figure the demand is small, sales only being made for special trade. In the country districts where there are supplies of dried apples, they are taking the places of "evaps" to a certain extent, while an improvement in the sales of canned apples is noted.

Canned pineapples are steady at present prices which have advanced with the general trend of the canned goods market. A steady trade is going in jams, marmalades and similar lines.

Sugar.—The general situation in sugar shows little change from a week ago, raws after a week's movement, within a small margin, being at about the same level. The market is now awaiting developments, with eyes on Cuba, where the winding up of the cane crop has started. The trade in refined continues quiet and retailers seem well supplied. Total stocks and afloat together show a visible supply of 3,621,514 tons, against 3,321,075 tons last year, an increase of 303,469 tons.

Syrups and Molasses.—Corn syrup still enjoys a good steady demand, but more attention is being given to maple, both canned and new. The quantity of pure new made arriving on this market is not large and is ranging from $1.15 to $1.25 per gallon. Molasses shows no change.

Dried Fruits.—There are no special features to the dried fruit market this week, but firmness continues. Reports from California say that prospects seem to warrant a bumper prune crop this year. Prices have already been quoted for these and while in comparison with present prices they might be considered low, still they are higher than the opening prices for an ordinary year. Prunes on the local market are getting in still smaller supply and high prices are affecting the amount of trade considerably. On the whole, considering high prices, there is a fair trade passing in dried fruits.

Coffee.—Dealers state that coffee sales are keeping as large as usual, even under the higher prices which are now being asked, compared with a year ago. One dealer said: "I am well satisfied with my coffee business and think the amount of the trade is just as large as before prices started to go up. There is one fact that is noticeable though, and that is a change in the quantity of each grade sold. I find that the volume of the trade is gradually being shifted from the lower grades which used to be in prominence, to the better quality. The rise in the lower grades have been much greater than in the higher. A year ago Rio was worth 12 to 13 cents, while now it is up to 18 to 20, while Java which a year ago was 27 to 30 cents, is now ranging at 27 to 33 cents."

MANITOBA MARKETS

Pointers—

Gallon Apples—Advanced.

Prunes—Stocks practically cleaned up.

Sugar—Still firm.

Nuts—In good demand.

Owing to the continued mild weather the spring business has opened with a rush and there is a heavy demand for all lines of groceries, as well as canned goods and syrup. These latter two having had an exceptionally good sale this season owing to the scarcity and high prices of evaporated apples.

Stocktaking by the wholesale firms is practically completed, and dealers are able once more to give their entire attention to the filling of orders which continue to arrive in large batches. Stocks from the manufacturers are arriving to replenish those lines in which the wholesalers found themselves on the short side.

Sugar—Telegraph dispatches from New York state that raw sugar is much firmer and notwithstanding the fact that with the opening of navigation there will be a reduction of six cents per cwt. in freight rate, it is expected amongst wholesalers that sugar will move upwards rather than downwards. The present situation is rather interesting. Prices on the local market, however, remain unchanged from last week's quotations.

Dried Fruits.—A heavy demand still continues for all lines. Apricots have taken another bound upwards and are retailing at 17 cents per pound. The market on prunes is practically cleaned up and only odd sizes can be secured now. Prices obtained by wholesalers vary in this line according to the stocks they hold. While it is a little early to forecast prices of a growing crop yet, advices from California state that the crop will be fairly large this year, and coming on an empty market should result in opening price remaining at fairly high figures.

Shelled Nuts.—Wholesalers predict a scarcity of shelled walnuts, and on the strength of this jobbers are said to be laying in about six to eight months' supply. Prices are unchanged.

NOVA SCOTIA MARKETS.

Halifax, April 13.—Dealers report a substantial decrease in the price of all pork products. Lard is now quoted at 12½ cents, pork (clear backs) at $22.50 per barrel; rolled bacon, 13c; and sides, 16½c. Hams are 14 to 16 cents.

Eggs are coming in good supply and the price is dropping every day. Some dealers were selling fresh laid stock today at 18c per dozen. A further decline in the price is looked for next week.

The supply of butter in sight is not heavy. Little new stock is reaching the market, and prices are a fraction firmer. They will likely remain so, as weather conditions are backward.

Tomatoes have been advanced from $1.30 to $1.50 per dozen. All canned goods are in demand, and sales of dried fruit, such as evaporated peaches, pears, and apples are heavy. Stocks of Valencia raisins are becoming light, but the California product will be along soon.

Potatoes continue firm and stocks are light.

There is practically no poultry on the local market. All of it coming from Ontario.

Jobbers report a good volume of orders coming in for house cleaning supplies, particularly from the country districts.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

St. John, April 12.—In view of the fact that the price of wheat has fallen off considerably, lately, in the Chicago market, jobbers here are looking for a drop in price at any time. It is the general opinion that the position of the flour market is weak.

In the produce market eggs are coming in freely and fresh laid stock are selling at 20 to 22 cents per doz., and in case at 18 cents.

Butter is unchanged, the quotations ranging from 20 cents, in tubs to 22 and 24 for rolls.

Maple products are coming in fairly well, though the price is still high, sugar selling at 15 to 16 cents per pound and syrup at $1 to $1.25 per gallon.

Potatoes have advanced to $2 and $2.25 per barrel, which is the record price this season. Seeded raisins have advanced and are now quoted at .08½ to .09¼ cents, while clusters are $2.35 to $3 per box. Fancy Barbadoes molasses is also higher being quoted now at 28 to 29 cents per gallon.

INFORMATION FOR BUYERS.

Supplied to the Trade by Sellers.

John Pither and his son, G. J. Pither, who were originally the owners of J. Pither, Limited, of Uxbridge, England, mushroom growers, have started business in Canada at Lindsay, Ontario. Messrs. Pither have been in the business of growing mushrooms for some thirty-five years, and if not the largest were first among the very largest growers of mushrooms in the United Kingdom. They have now completed at Lindsay one of the largest plants for growing mushrooms on the American Continent, and will endeavor to supply the Canadian trade. Mushroom growing seems to be in its infancy in this country, and it would appear that there is a splendid opening here for producers of these delicious table delicacies.

Ventilation and light make the new building of Ramsays, Limited, Montreal, a veritable sunshine bakery. People, nowadays, want to know, for instance, that the biscuits they buy are made, not only of the best materials, but are also made under the very best conditions. This thorough and sensible investigation is what is requested by Ramsays, Limited, makers of "Ramsay's Farm Cream Sodas," and other high-grade biscuits. This company has a fine big factory at Nicolet and Duquette Streets, Hochelaga, with a floor space of some 25,000 square feet. Plans are already under way for an addition which will practically double the present space. This extension will be used for preparing "Ramsay's Chocolates" and "Imperial Syrups," now being manufactured at 29 Vitre Street. Ramsays Limited, will prepare only one grade of biscuits, the best that the purest and richest materials can produce, and fully equal to anything made abroad. "Ramsay's Biscuits" come "right from the oven to the table," which insures them being fresh and crisp. The president of the company is James Ramsay, Esq., of Ramsay Bros., Vancouver, and the vice-president is Geo. H. Ramsay, Esq., of Montreal.

The Crystal Sealing Company, of Chicago, makers of machines for saving both the time and money of retailers, have opened a Canadian office in Toronto, and have been successful in placing their device out among the trade. Their machine is calculated to eliminate the use of twine in parcelling goods. Two or more rolls of gummed tape, of varying widths and strength and each 800 feet in length, are placed in an elaborate metal holder, feeding out by hand between a moistening roller which revolves in a porcelain-coated pan. Two inches of this gummed tape will bind a package more securely than ten times the quantity of twine. The advertisement of any dealer can be printed upon the tape, so that his name goes out on every package.

Meadowsweet Cheese Co., of Montreal, will shortly remove from 592 St. Paul St., to more commodious premises at 21 Bonsecours St. This cheese has met with considerable success since it was placed on the market no doubt due to its delicious creamy flavor. It is done up in a very neat and attractive package and retails for 10c, the numerous grocers at present stocking it finding it a rapid and profitable seller.

Fred A. Verey, Toronto, who has represented the Edwardsburg Starch Co., Cardinal, Ont., for many years is severing his connection with this company to go into business for himself.

Maritime Store Produced After Years of Effort

"I began business thirty-four years ago in a small store 20 x 24 feet," said W. R. McMillan, president of the McMillan Co., Ltd., of Durham Centre, N.B., to The Grocer recently.

It was with just a little exhibition of business pride that Mr. McMillan gave voice to the above statement. He had, as he stated, started out in a small way —"in a small store 20 x 24 feet"—but now, as the accompanying illustration shows, his establishment seems to have most of the evidences of substantial success.

But to continue. He says: "I kept adding to the old building as my business grew, until the store was 48 x 48 feet on the ground. Fifteen years ago I added lumbering and milling to my other trade. Three years ago, I turned the business into a joint stock company with a capital of $60,000. This last was done to give my employes an opportunity to acquire a financial interest in the business. We offered to sell $200 shares to our men at par, but only two have taken advantage of it so far. We have repeatedly refused to sell stock to individuals not our employes."

There is the story of a life-time of striving, told in a paragraph. Readers will be able to imagine just how slow and hard was the evolution Mr. McMillan and his associates wrought in their business during all those long years.

The new store, he says, covers over 12,000 feet of floor space. It has a frontage on the highway of ninety-one feet, and four plate-glass windows have been installed to take fullest advantage of this position. Within are to be found some modern fixtures, also, and a glance at the counters will disclose the workmanship of a firm which is pushing forward a new idea. In another issue more may be told of the business of this hard-working maritime merchant.

With the house cleaning season at hand, stocks of cleansers, mops, brooms and soaps should be looked to and well displayed about the store. The window should not be forgotten.

Don't take every customer's word for it that So-and-so is cutting below you in price. There are dishonest customers now and then.

Improvement in Provision Trade

Easter Has Brought Better Demand—Dealers Expect Trade to Show More Life—English and United States Markets Easier — Live Hog Prices Lower—Eggs Plentiful, With Good Demand—Butter a Shade Easier.

There is an improvement in the provision trade this week which is appreciated by dealers after the slackness noticeable during Lent and all are looking forward to a good spring trade.

The English market is easier again this week, while the Chicago market is also a little off. This has been reflected on the Canadian markets, where with only a normal supply, the price of live hogs has been reduced 25 cents to the hundred pound. This causes a fractionally easier feeling in provisions, but no changes in price have taken place.

The receipts of eggs continue large and prices are somewhat easier. Farmers are rushing them to market for the Easter trade. However, the demand will drop off a little after Easter and dealers believe that if supplies keep up, slightly lower prices may be seen.

The butter market feels to a certain extent the receipts of new made, which are arriving and an easier feeling is noticeable. While from some centres it is reported that the old make of butter has been well taken up at other places large supplies are reported. The demand at present seems to be for first grade only so that difficulty is found in disposing of any that does not measure well up to the required standard. Future prices depend to a large extent on the arrival of new made.

Cheese is inclined to quietness, but has lost none of its firmness, as stocks held in all centres are not large. The honey market is unchanged and quiet, the trade in maple syrup detracting attention from it.

MONTREAL.

Provisions.—The feature of the market this week is the increased demand from all parts of the country. Prices have remained steady, a fact that has lent encouragement to the trade. Orders have been decidedly liberal, showing that the retail trade look forward to a good demand. While the market is generally reported steady it has responded slightly to the new business and a slightly stronger feeling. Business should continue to be good after Easter.

Butter.—The local market feels to a certain extent the receipts of the new creamery. Some lots of this butter from the townships have been received, and while it is finding a certain trade there is a good demand for last season's later makes. The price of the new creamery is lower than that which opened 1910. The market is inclined to be unsettled as the result of the new and old makes meeting just now. The holdings of the latter are not heavy.

Eggs.—The local price has dropped another cent during the past week, owing to the continued heavy receipts. Demand has also been heavy and for that reason business has been on a satisfactory basis. The present price at country points is said to be lower than at any time during the past two years. Easter is expected to bring a brisk business and the grocers and provision stores are prepared for the best.

Cheese.—The market is inclined to quietness. Supplies are limited practically to the new make except for those dealers who may still be holding some of last season's stock. The present demand is ordinary. The value of last season's make amounted to $20,000,000 which, considering the various conditions, is viewed as a fair showing.

Provisions.—Easiness in the English market is responsible for a further reduction in live hogs this week of 25 cents which following upon last week's drop of 20 cents, goes to supply easier feeling in the provision market, although prices show little change. Short cut port in barrels has been reduced and now ranges at $23 to $24. Lard following the trend of the hog market also exhibits an easier tone. Trade in provisions shows improvement this week and after Easter is expected ta be more favorable than during the Lenten season.

Butter.—Butter exhibits a little easier feeling this week and some firms are quoting at a reduction. Arrivals during the past week have shown some improvement, while it is reported that all is not of the best quality. As to the amount of old butter held on this market, differences of opinion exist. The demand for best quality is good, but some difficulty is being found in reducing stocks of the poorer grade.

Eggs.—The price of eggs this week is slightly easier, ranging around 18 cents, with some firms asking ½ cent more. The receipts have been large with a corresponding increase in demand for the Easter trade. With the large arrivals which are expected to continue, dealers believe that prices may show a further slight reduction when the Easter demand has vanished.

WINNIPEG.

Provisions.—Trade in provisions has been rather light during the last few weeks. The Lenten season which is just about over has had a rather quieting effect on the market in meats, but with the approach of Easter an optimistic view is again present and all look for a decided increase as soon as this period arrives. The lard market is still weak and prices are declining, although no change has as yet been made on this market. The price of live hogs took a fifty cents per cwt. decline during the week, but shippers are endeavoring to raise the price again with the result that a war is being waged between dealers and shippers.

CHIEF IN THE FAR WEST.

Sketch of Man in Charge of Subscription Work for MacLean's.

H. Hodgson, who has been in charge for three years of the subscription work of the MacLean Publishing Company in the Provinces of British Columbia and Alberta has had an ideal training for our work.

He began his business career as a clerk in a retail store in South Africa and there is no better training for a young man than is to be found in a few years behind the counter in a small store. More men have laid the foundation of their success there than in any other experience.

H. HODGSON,

Who has had Charge of MacLean Publishing Subscription Work in British Columbia and Alberta for the Past Three Years, With Headquarters in Vancouver.

From Africa, Mr. Hodgson came to Canada and was for some years in the retail news business in Winnipeg. Seeing a good future in subscription work he joined the Collier's Weekly Staff. In his travels throughout the North-West he saw the MacLean Publications everywhere and came to the conclusion that with the rapid growth of the West there was a good prospect for him. He applied and was appointed to the staff.

TO PROTECT SEED BUYERS.

Minister of Agriculture Introduces Bill At Ottawa.

A proposed amendment to the Seed Control Act, that has been referred to the agricultural committee at Ottawa, provides :—That no person shall sell, offer, expose or have in possession for sale any seeds of timothy, alsike, red clover or alfalfa, in or from any receptacle unless marked with the designation of the grade of seeds and come within the requirements prescribed for each such designation.

Hon. Sydney Fisher, minister of agriculture, speaking in reference to this clause said : "We provide for the grading of timothy, alsike, red clover or alfalfa seeds under different standards of quality. Under the existing act there was a standard for No. 1 and then another standard up to which all grass seeds had to go. Seed merchants put on their seed that it was up to the government standard, and the farmers were tempted by that into believing that this was a high standard fixed by the government to ensure very good seeds ; whereas, as a matter of fact, it was a standard fixed as a minimum below which no seed could be sold. We now wish to grade the seeds, extra No. 1 ; No. 1 ; No. 2 ; No. 3 ; etc."

LIGHTING SYSTEM

Mr. Grocer—

If you could make your store more attractive, cheerful and inviting with a pure white light of intense brilliancy, that would display your stock to better advantage and would suggest to your clerks to keep your stock neat and clean—that would make your store as bright as day and cost you less than you pay at present for a poorly lighted store—wouldn't it pay you to investigate such a light? The R-K System of Lighting costs less than gas or electricity, is easy to operate, requires little attention and is permitted by all insurance companies. It is used and recommended by thousands of Canadian merchants. Let us tell you more about it—Write to-day for Booklet "M"—a postal brings it—it's free.

THE STANDARD OF CANADA

Your customers demand goods of known value, and the attempted substitution of the "just as good" brands will not be attractive to most people. Quantity does not necessarily mean quality. The quality of Gillett's Lye is too well known to be compared with the imitations that are offered to the trade from time to time. The observing dealer finds that the consumer of to-day demands quality in their goods regardless of the size of the package. The profit on a well-known and well-advertised branded article of standard quality is more lasting and satisfactory than on the "just as good" kinds, which at their best are but imitations – cheaply made from low grade materials. Such goods can, and should be sold at a low price; and even though an increased quantity is offered, an attempt to substitute a poor quality article for Gillett's Lye may result in the loss of valued customers.

Flour Down Thirty Cents Per Barrel

Most Mills Join in Announcement—Drop Not Unexpected Because of Continued Low Price of Wheat—Reduction Probably Hastened by Lowering of Rail and Water Rate, Which is Expected in Few Days—Wheat Slightly Firmer.

An announcement of a reduction of 30 cents per barrel in flour is made by most mills this week. This drop in price was not unexpected, as the position of the wheat market has seemed to warrant lower values for some time and it may have been hastened by the fact that the rail and water rate on spring wheat from the West will be reduced in a few days.

Business in flour, is not brisk but it is hoped that this lower level will put more life into the market. Some export business was done at the end of last week but it is not steady. Still, most mills are kept fairly busy with the delivery of present contracts.

Wheat has reacted slightly from the low level which it reached last week, the market showing strength because the United States government report proved less rosy than expected. The government report estimates the condition of growing wheat at 83.3 per cent., which is said to be sufficient to ensure a crop of 500 million bushels.

A difference of opinion as regards the future movement of wheat still exists. One dealer said, "I think the upward reaction of about one cent from prices ruling a week ago will only be temporary. It is agreed that the supplies of wheat in the world are extremely large and as the prospects so far for the growing crop have been quite satisfactory I cannot see anything but easiness in future wheat prices."

Another dealer expressed a view that was nearly the opposite. He said: "I think wheat at the present price is worth the money. Conditions of the growing crop will rule to a large extent the future prices of wheat. So far crop conditions have been extremely favorable—could hardly have been more so—and better conditions, or even a continuance of those existing now can hardly be looked for."

Cereals are unchanged, with no special features noticeable at present. Trade on the whole continues normal.

MONTREAL.

Flour.—The local flour market is down 30 cents per barrel this week, a reduction which was not at all unexpected. The wheat market has been ruling weak for some time and the fact that the rail and water rate on spring wheat from the west will be reduced in a few days is responsible for the drop. Demand is only normal.

Flour.—The drop in flour has at last taken place and this week quotations have been reduced 30 cents per barrel, bringing 1st patents down to $5.10. A COAL OIL WAR.

Grocers and Hardware Men at Variance in Western Ontario Town.

Lucknow, Ont., April 13.—Grocers and hardware men of Lucknow are engaged in a price-cutting war over coal oil. For many years the two hardware stores by which the village is served did practically all the trade in this line, and oil sold at 20 and 25 cents per gallon for Canadian and American, respectively.

Recently, however, the grocers "cut in" on the trade; a new co-operative delivery system, with which the hardware men are not associated, resulted in a diversion of trade in the grocers' favor, and Canadian oil is now quoted by them at 12 cents per gallon, American at 14.

VALORIZATION COFFEE DOUBLED.

Last Saturday, while the New York coffee dealers, at least a goodly portion of them, were wondering at the secrecy maintained by those in charge of the selling of the 300,000 bags of valorization coffee allotted to New York for April, a sudden decision was reached by the valorization men to double the quantity and give New York all she was entitled to under both sales.—(One April first, and one laeer on in the month.) The sale was made on a basis of 12¾ cents for Santos 6. The given reason for grouping the two was that it would probably dispel all feeling of uneasiness.

Trade Increases as Easter Draws Near

Both Fruits and Vegetables are Going Out Better This Week —Weather Has Been More Favorable—Business in Tomatoes Continues Steady—Firmer Feeling in Market—End of Florida Celery Shipments—Still Some in Storage at Canadian Centres.

With the continuance of mild weather a better feeling has been developed in both fruit and vegetable markets. Dealers do not begin to really push these lines until the weather settles. But the Easter demand is also responsible for a good deal of this increased business this week.

The shipments of Florida celery for this season are finished. Considerable stocks are held on some Canadian markets to supply the demand for a while, and as these holdings grow short, some may be imported from those United States markets which are well supplied. Later there may be some shipments received from Michigan.

The trade in Florida tomatoes continues steady and a firmer feeling is noticeable in the market. The crop this year has not been as large as at first expected. Then railroad service said to be bad, made things still worse. Crates could not be got in, nor the fruit sent out promptly. The congestion is over now but the earlier crop was not all marketed.

Oranges show no change in price and the market still continues steady. There has been a big crop of California fruit this year, the shipments from Southern California up to March 28th amounting to 16,845 cars, as compared with 10,966 cars last year. Shipments of late have been quite large, but a good demand has kept the market steady. More oranges are going out this week to supply the Easter trade.

Strawberries are more satisfactory in price and the trade shows some improvement. Bananas have also had an increase since the weather became milder. There has also been an improvement in the demand for imported vegetables this week for the Easter trade.

MONTREAL.

Green Fruits.—There is no special feature to the fruit market this week. There is a slight improvement in the demand for general lines such as oranges. apples, etc., although apples are ruling rather high for the average householder. Strawberries are fairly prominent but the price is still too high for the general public.

Vegetables.—The Easter demand has had a good effect on the market as is shown by the heavier orders that have been received. Asparagus is being asked for to a greater extent and local dealers expect that the price which has prevailed of late will be exceeded, owing to the fact that supplies are not heavy. Tomatoes are also being consumed to a greater extent and are one of the principal vegetables in demand just now.

Green Fruits.—The warm weather this week has put more life into the fruit trade, while the Easter demand has also acted as a help in this direction. Tomatoes are enjoying a steady trade at prices ranging around $2.50 to $2.75 while the amount of business being done in oranges is quite satisfactory. Strawberries are offered this week at 30 cents per quart with Louisiana pints bringing 14 to 16 cents. Pineapples are a little more in evidence on the market but the trade at present prices is rather inactive.

Vegetables.—The continued milder weather and the approach of Easter is responsible for an improvement in the vegetable trade. Some price changes are noticeable. The firmer feeling in cabbage, noted last week, has turned into an advance with old Canadians now quoted at $1.50 to $1.75. Louisiana beets are up 25 cents and are bringing $1.25 per dozen. Boston head lettuce have been raised to $4.50 to $5.00 per hamper, while Boston cucumbers are down to $2.00 per dozen. Scarcity of stocks has boosted prices of potatoes, which have risen this week under a scarcity, and $1.10 for Ontarios and $1.25 for Delewares is asked. However, dealers think that Ontarios will not rule much over $1.00, there being only a temporary shortness of supplies, but Delawares are conceded to be really scarce. Florida cabbage is offered on the market this week at $2.75 per crate and Bermuda onions at $4.00 per crate.

STORE HINTS.

Don't let lack of experience frighten you out of attempting new plans. If you never make any experiments, you may never make any mistakes, and you will just as surely never make any successes either.

Food displays need to be appetizing and always timely. A word about each kind of goods and the price, often makes new customers.

Proper lighting of both store and window is highly important. A window must be well lighted for no one will stop to look into a poorly lighted one.

Price cards save the answering of many questions and often make sales to customers who dislike for some reason to enquire prices on goods even in which they are interested.

The best season for seeds is approaching and the grocer should start to make his displays. The country merchant should not forget the chances for the sale of seed potatoes.

Many merchants are selling large quantities of molasses to farmers for the feeding of cattle and horses. Molasses meal is also asked for more.

The Easter season is a good time to push holiday goods. There is no reason why nuts should not be sold as freely as at Christmas time. Candies and fruits should be given prominence at this time.

The country merchant during the spring months should be able to work up a good trade in calf meal. It is a good side line for the farmer's trade.

With the appearance of waggons, merchants should stock a small quantity of axle grease. It will prevent the customer from going to another store for it.

As the mud disappears from the streets, people will be discarding their rubbers and it is a good time to feature boot polishes and brushes.

Fish Trade Is Making Its Final Bid

Demand for the Last Week of Lent is Good—Increase in Arrivals of Fresh Fish—Halibut and Haddock are the Leading Lines—Trade for the Season is Satisfactory to Dealers—Will Likely Steady Down Now.

More activity is being shown in the fish trade this week, and the Lenten season is winding up with fair business passing. The number of lines of fresh fish arriving is increasing and all are finding a good sale on the different markets. Among the leading lines of fresh fish being offered are halibut and haddock. Fresh salmon is being offered on some markets, but prices are nearly prohibitive. Prices on the whole remain quite steady.

Dealers seem to be quite satisfied with the volume of fish sales during the Lenten season. There was a slight slackness about the fourth week, but that was to be expected after the large trade during the opening weeks. On the whole the trade compares favorably with last year.

QUEBEC.

Montreal.—Fresh fish has been arriving more freely and is finding its place on the market. There are still fairly liberal supplies of frozen fish which have not been affected by the warm weather, owing to the fact that they have been carried in cold storage. Among the leading lines of fresh fish are halibut and haddock including a fancy shore fish that is popular. Fresh pike and dore are beginning to arrive but the close season for dore or pickerel begins April 15. Shad are coming in more freely and prices are now reasonable. The stocks of prepared fish are still enjoying a good demand but it is expected that henceforth frozen fish will find the greater bulk of the demand.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

St. John. — Stormy weather last week was responsible for the rather meagre supply of fish on the local market. All kind of fresh fish were scarce, though with the weather clearing it was expected that the present week would see the arrival of some good catches.

ONTARIO.

Toronto.—The last bid of the entire season is being made among the fish dealers this week, and more activity is shown than during the past two weeks. Following Easter the trade will likely settle down to its usual steady proportions, after a Lenten trade that all dealers seem to be well satisfied with. White fish and herring are added this week to the list of fresh caught, on this market. Smelts, tullibees, bloaters and kippers have been about cleaned up. Prices are unchanged, except for reductions on lines which different firms want to clear out. Pickled lake herring that are left are being offered at prices ranging around $2.80, the usual price being $3.80 to $4.00.

NOVA SCOTIA.

Halifax.—Fish is in fairly good supply on the local market, several inshore bankers having arrived during the week with good fares. The halibut is of fine quality, but the haddock are poor, being thin. This, however, is about the usual condition of these fish. The lobster situation shows little change, both as regards prices and catch. There has been a small increase in the shipments from Nova Scotia to Boston. Some small-sized lobsters are offered for sale here, but the price is practically prohibitive. Early American bankers are returning to Gloucester, and Boston with fairly good fares. One vessel that arrived this week had 93,000 pounds of cod and haddock, and another had 70,000 pounds. These vessels sold their haddock for $2.85, and $4.00 for their large cod.

Fresh salmon, taken from the rivers of Western Nova Scotia are being shipped from this province to the United States market. The number of fish taken is small, but the salmon are bringing from 75 cents to one dollar per pound in the large cities. None are offered in the local market as the price is prohibitive.

Sales of oysters are reported good, the stock offering being principally American in bulk. Smoked haddies are scarce, but kippers, salmon, bloaters, and fillets are in good supply. The sales of fillets show a gradual increase.

NEWFOUNDLAND.

St. John's.—The fishing on the southwest coast has been quite good, particularly around the waters of Rose Blanche, and most of the people daily secure good catches when they get on the grounds, but operations are considerably retarded by bad weather. It is said that people from St. Jacques, Grand Bank, Belloram, Fortune, and Rose Blanche will not begin bank fishery operations this year before the last of April or first of May which is rather later than usual. Fishing schooners are being fitted up and crews gotten together to start as soon as possible.

MANITOBA.

Fish.—As is always the case at this time of the year trade in this commodity has been exceedingly active during the last three weeks. The first fresh fish of the season arrived on the market during the week in very limited amounts in the form of fresh salmon, and is being sold at 18 cents per pound. Prices are unchanged from the opening of the fasting season.

Care for the Storeroom as Well as Store

How Carelessness of One Type of Clerk Plays Havoc in the Stock Room—Delineation of Several Methods—Some Suggestions for the Overcoming of This — Inducing the Hurrying Clerk to Think for the Future.

(By J. W. Bryans.)

Carefulness and neatness in clerks, about the store proper, is a trait to be appreciated, but there are clerks who while most careful in this particular, are utterly indifferent about the appearance of the other parts of the establishment, sections not open to the general public, but which play an important part in the general well-being of the whole store.

This type of helper will rush to the storeroom, turn two or three boxes or bags over in getting what is wanted and leave them in that position.

In a few minutes he goes out again for some five pound bags, and there being some other size on top, he throws them on a nearby box, secures the five pound bags, and rushes back to the store.

How It Ends.

This goes on until the storeroom is in a very jumbled condition and until what is wanted can be secured only with a great deal of trouble, while, if he carefully replaced the goods each time, everything would have been in order and it would have been much pleasanter for the clerk. It takes very little time to keep the stock well arranged, and saves goods from damage, while it also makes an orderly impression upon visitors. It also makes work for the clerk much easier. If he would but stop for a moment when on one of these wild dashes, and think what a simple matter it would be to keep the stock in good shape, he would, no doubt, at once resolve to carefully replace goods in the future. It is not that clerks are rushed that this state of affairs exists, but because they get into the habit of storeroom carelessness easily, and then find it hard to break. It would be greatly to their advantage to do so.

Placing Goods.

Something might also be said about the proper placing of goods when they are received in the storehouse. "A place for everything and everything in its place" should be the ideal in the arrangement of goods in the storeroom. Some planning and exercise of judgment will do a lot in lessening future work. Do not pile yellow and granulated sugar together so that you will have to pull a bag of white sugar down to get at a bag of yellow. Have a pile for each and when you want a bag you can go and get it without any trouble. In the same way pile each make of flour separately so that when you want a particular brand, you will merely have to go to its pile and get it.

Storing Canned Goods.

When a shipment of canned goods is received in the fall, I have seen clerks pile tomatoes, peas, corn and fruits all together. The whole winter long each time a case of canned goods was wanted it was necessary that several cases be disturbed to secure the required variety. Planning and thinking, not only of completing the work at hand, but of saving trouble in the days to come makes the work of a clerk much easier.

It might also be well to speak of another phase of storeroom work, and that is placing goods so that they will not be damaged. Do not pile goods that are liable to leak on top of other goods which it might destroy. One illustration of this, is where molasses or syrup, which are liable to leak, are placed on other goods. Care should be taken that cases of syrup, molasses, etc., are piled right side up. Then, too, instead of allowing brooms to lie around the storeroom and the straw to become damaged, a rack can be put up in a short time that will keep them in first-class condition and also give more space in the storeroom

There are many such little things that will arise from time to time, where a little thought and effort on the part of the clerk will keep goods in the storehouse from becoming damaged.

FLORIDA FRUIT CROP.

London Dealer Says It Will Be Small, Owing to Lack of Rain.

London, Ont., April 13.—A local fruit dealer, who has just returned from several weeks in the South, reports that the Florida fruit crop will be small this year, owing to lack of rain, none having fallen from the first week in January till last week. With wind and hot sun, he said the trees were almost dead when they should have been blooming.

The vegetable crop is large this year. The tomato yield has been so great, he said, that the East Coast Railway was swamped, while thousands of crates of tomatoes spoiled. The celery crop was also large, and the yield of watermelons from Florida will be heavy.

Chas, Chaput, of the wholesale grocery firm of Chaput, Fils et Cie., Limited, is spending five weeks at New York and Atlantic City.

Peterboro, Ont., is to have a library voting contest according to one of the newspapers of that city.

John A. Gunn, of Gunn, Langlois & Co., Ltd., Montreal, has been spending a few holidays in Atlantic City with his family.

The R. Stirrett Company, Petrolea, have installed cash carriers in their grocery department.

CIVIL SERVICE CO-OPERATION.

Rules and Regulations Under Which Federal Association Will Operate.

Ottawa, March 30.—Throughout the whole civil service, it is said, a circular letter has been distributed in behalf of the newly-incorporated Civil Service Co-operative Supply Association. These circulars state that as soon as the membership is sufficient, it is proposed to begin business in the supply of staple groceries. Other lines are to be added as soon as the trade warrants.

Rules and regulations to govern the organization have been drafted. These have been printed in pamphlet form and distributed among the members. Each member is required to pay an initial fee of $2 and to buy one debenture at $5. There is no share capital. Business is to be conducted on a cash basis, all goods to be paid for when ordered or delivered, at current retail prices. After deducting running expenses, the net profits are to be divided among the members in proportion to the value of their purchases.

Grocer's Encyclopedia—The Pineapple

Some Interesting Facts About the Delicious Dessert Fruit Now Coming Upon the General Market—How it Originated and Where Transplanting Has Been Attended With Success—The Size of the Plant and Its Manner of Growth.

Usually when one thinks of pineapples it is to pine trees that the mind unconsciously turns, assuming as its name implies that the fruit is really the "apple of the pine."

As a matter of fact there is nothing majestical about the pineapple plant. A tuft of long stiff sharp-pointed leaves, about 12 in number—it grows from 2 to 4 feet high. From the middle of this tuft springs a short stem bearing a single fruit stalk. At its top is found a crown of small leaves which can easily be trained into a new plant. And that is all. Each plant produces only one "apple" and then dies leaving behind a number of shoots to transplant and keep up the supply.

Native to South America.

Still it is a delicious dessert fruit. A native of South America, it has been transplanted at various times and is now successfully cultivated in most tropical countries, and particularly in Madeira, Canary, Zanzibar, Natal, Singapore, and the Indies, where they grow wild in most hedgerows. But in the Bahama Islands off Florida, in the Atlantic Ocean, the pines are regularly raised in fields, in immense quantities. The pines thrive best in rich, warm, moist, sandy land, which after being used four or five years, requires a long rest

Methods of Cultivation.

The methods of cultivation are really primitive, or at least were so up to the last year or so. As many as 20,000 plants were crammed into an acre of ground. The crop is ready in from 18 months to two years from the time of planting. When ripe the apples are cut and carried on the heads of men and women to the nearest beach for shipment. Most of these Bahama apples, go, it is claimed, to Baltimore canning factories. They are coarse but are good travelers.

But the pineapples coming to this country seem to be improving in quality every year, and the demand for the fruit is steadily increasing. It is more trouble to prepare the "apple" for table than is the case of either the orange or the banana, and probably that is the reason why it is not even more generally used. But, more and more find their way to household cellars every summer in the shape of preserves, and, as the methods of "putting down" improve, and the real merits of the fruit assert themselves, the growth of sales will be greater each year. The ripe raw fruit contains very powerful digestive juices. This is also true of the preserved, which is considered better when at least a year old.

Season Coming On.

The pineapple season is now coming on and the merchant should try to increase his sales in this line. By telling customers of its digestive qualities: interesting them, by telling where and how they are grown: instructing them in the best method of preparing, he should be able to take a stride forward in this trade.

One writer tells how best to eat what he calls: "the king of fruits." He says that it should be noticed the pine has a fibre running from centre to circumference, and to have it tender, it should be nicely pared, and all the eyes cut out. After this has been properly done slice the pine vertically: keep turning the apple and slicing off the outside until the core is reached. Thus you may eat the fruit without fear of a sore mouth from the spear in each eye, and it will also be tender and juicy, because cut across the fibre."

Canada receives her pineapples largely from Florida and the West Indies, although some from California, Hawaii and Mexico are received.

HINTS FOR GROCERS.

A consumer of average intelligence, on entering a grocery store, encounters an atmosphere—gets an impression. What does she get in your store?

It pays for clerks to know the names of customers, and it also pays to have the clerks known by name to as many of their customers as possible.

As the weather grows warmer, people frequent the streets, and for that reason more time should be spent on fixing the window, so that it may be attractive.

In order that your business may have a "Good Will" asset you must possess the confidence and the friendship of your customers.

The merchant who regards the cash discount as a little thing is obviously lacking in a right sense of proportion. The cash discount is one of the biggest things in merchandising.

YOU DON'T BUY a National Cash Register—it pays for itself. Saves money. Prevents mistakes. We can prove it. National Cash Register Co., 285 Yonge St., Toronto.

TECHNICAL BOOKS.

CANADIAN MACHINERY AND MANUFACTURING NEWS, $1 per year. Every manufacturer using power should receive this publication regularly, and also see that it is placed in the hands of his engineer or superintendent. Every issue is full of practical articles, well calculated to suggest economies in the operation of a plant. Condensed advertisements for "Machinery Wanted" inserted free for subscribers to the GROCER. "Machinery for Sale" advertisements one cent per word each insertion. Sample copy on request. CANADIAN MACHINERY, 143-149 University Ave., Toronto.

SALES PLANS—This book is a collection of 333 successful plans that have been used by retail merchants to get more business. These include Special Sales, Getting Holiday Business, Co-operative Advertising, Money-Making Ideas, Contests, etc. Price $2.50, postpaid. MacLean Publishing Co., Technical Book Dept., 143-149 University Ave., Toronto.

NOTICE TO MANUFACTURERS.

CANADIAN TRADING COMPANY wishes to announce that they are open for business in Winnipeg and desires to get in touch with manufacturers and exporters of high class grocery lines. Address 11, Bank of Hamilton, Winnipeg.

PERIODICAL DEPT.

THE MACLEAN'S MAGAZINE is the most popular periodical of its kind. Why? Because each issue contains a strong list of original articles of interest to every Canadian. It also reproduces the most timely, instructive and interesting articles appearing in the other magazines and periodicals of the month. The cream of the world's periodical press is too valuable to overlook. MACLEAN'S is on sale at all news-stands. Better still, send $2 for one year's subscription. Mail it to-day. The Maclean's Magazine, Toronto.

Keep in mind the dominant fact that mankind from its first appearance on the earth has been schooled by nature to look for signs; for invitations to taste; for suggestions as to what to wear. Tell your story briefly, forcibly, truthfully, and address it through the proper media and you can successfully apply advertising as a means to increased distribution.

Grocery Advertising

By Wm. Borsodi
